

Chapter 554 Found A Job

Melissa made the call tentatively, not expecting such an enthusiastic response.

It left her feeling slightly embarrassed.

"Okay, I'll come another day."

"Well, how about tomorrow? If you're busy, we can arrange a car to pick you up."

Dumbfounded, Melissa wondered if he might be too eager.

"I'm not pushing you. It's just that we really need someone like you."

"Well, I'll come tomorrow."

Since the man on the other end of the line was so persistent, she figured that refusing would seem arrogant.

The number had come from Aloys, whom she trusted not only because he had saved her life, but also because she knew him to be a righteous gentleman.

The next day, Melissa donned her business suit and applied light makeup.

After ensuring everything was in order, she went downstairs to take the two children to kindergarten.

Upon seeing Melissa, the children immediately complimented her. Lindsey said, "Mommy, you look beautiful today. Where are you going?"

"I have an interview at a university today. If all goes well, I'll be teaching there."

Lindsey clapped her hands excitedly. "Oh! That's great! I'll have a mom who's a teacher."

Vivienne interjected, "Melissa, why do you have to work? You can just stay at home. We have enough money to support you. Working outside is hard."

"Work helps people find meaning in life, especially for young people. I'll feel empty if I just stay home."

Vivienne knew Melissa was ambitious but didn't want her to endure any hardship. She persisted, "Your previous job was demanding and dangerous. Now that you finally have some free time, I'd like you to rest for a while."

"Thank you, but I've had plenty of rest. If I rest any longer, I might forget my expertise."

"Alright, as long as you're passionate about it, I won't stop you. Just make sure to prioritize your safety."

"I will."

After dropping the kids off at kindergarten, Melissa was about to leave when Merrick tugged on her sleeve.

"Mommy, can you come to our parent-teacher conference this noon?"

Melissa squatted down and said patiently, "Merrick, I have a university interview today, remember? If it's successful, I'll be learning about my new job briefly, so I won't have time today."

"Okay."

Merrick lowered his head in disappointment. "When you were a doctor, we didn't dare to disturb you because you were so busy. Either Aloys or Vivienne would go to our parent-teacher conferences."

Melissa was taken aback by his words.

She suddenly realized that she had rarely attended her children's parent-teacher conferences.

In the past, whenever the kids mentioned these events, she was either performing surgery or saving a patient. The children stopped asking her, not wanting to interrupt her work, and would instead invite Aloys or Vivienne to attend.

Contemplating this, Melissa felt a pang of guilt for neglecting her children's needs. They had always been considerate of her, but she hadn't reciprocated that thoughtfulness.
