

Chapter 597 Being Interrupted

Melissa's instincts kicked in as she sensed danger.

She scowled and said in a warning tone, "We're in a hospital!"

Despite her warning, Everett ignored her and began stroking her body.

He was aware of their surroundings, but the closer he got to Melissa, the stronger her scent became. It was a scent he had missed dearly, especially as he fell asleep with her in his arms that night. He had managed to keep his desire at bay, but only God knew how.

With Everett's constant teasing, Melissa's body became sensitive, and she reached out instinctively, wrapping her thin arms around his neck.

As his seductive, cold lips pressed against her fiery red ones, the air around them became much more romantic.

Their intense kissing came to an abrupt halt when someone pushed open the office door.

Melissa pulled away from Everett, like a frightened deer.

The nurse, Mary Clarke, stood in the doorway, stunned by what she had just witnessed. She couldn't decide whether to come into the office or leave, so she froze, wishing she could disappear from the earth for a while to avoid the awkwardness.

Realizing the nurse's presence, Everett cast an unhappy glance at her before turning his attention back to Melissa. He knew he couldn't keep kissing her with someone else in the room.

"What's up?" he asked.

The nurse was scared out of her wits when she met Everett's sharp eyes. She stammered, "Oh, I dropped by to inform Dr. Sherman that the director wants to have a meeting with the doctors."

"I see. Thanks," Melissa replied. She straightened her clothes and said, "You are now free to leave. Don't you have to go to work now?"

Everett's brow furrowed as he realized that Melissa was about to kick him out of her office. He was annoyed because he wanted to kiss her passionately and make her cry and beg for him to stop.

But thinking she had a meeting, he decided not to linger any longer. He put on his suit jacket and left the place.

After Everett left, Mary heaved a sigh of relief, approached Melissa, and asked, "Who's that guy? Is he your boyfriend?"

"He is the father of my children," she replied, hesitating to introduce him as her husband. Even though they were still legally married, she felt awkward introducing Everett as her husband.

"The father of your children?" Mary was taken aback by the revelation. "But you look so young and fit, how could you have had children?"

"People who have had children don't always have bad figures," Melissa replied with a slight smile.

"But you're still so young"

Mary scratched her head in confusion, wondering if all pretty women got married and had children at a very young age.

Despite having a few patients to see in the afternoon after spending the entire morning in meetings, Melissa didn't feel overburdened. This private hospital had few patients, making it a pleasant place to work for her. She was even planning to stay in the office comfortably until the end of the day, but unfortunately, an incident disrupted her plans.

She had just settled back in her office after the ward rounds. She had brewed herself a cup of tea and was looking forward to a moment of peace and quiet when Mary suddenly burst into the room.

"Dr. Sherman! You have to come with me right now! A woman is screaming in the lobby. She's threatening to cause a scene if you won't show up!"