

Chapter 644 Getting Along Well

Lindsey approached with a large bag when she spoke to Star, who was engrossed in solving a difficult puzzle with Merrick.

Star nodded enthusiastically. "Yes, I love playing with toys."

"Great. Let's go to my room," Lindsey suggested.

The two young girls cheerfully headed towards Lindsey's room.

Upon entering, Star was awestruck by the room's decor, which resembled something out of a princess tale.

Such opulence was only familiar to her from cartoons.

With a hint of uncertainty, she asked, "Will I be living in this room from now on?"

Lindsey, misinterpreting Star's surprise as displeasure, hurriedly reassured her, "Please stay here. My room is spacious enough for both of us to share the bed. If you're uncomfortable, I can ask Grandma to arrange a separate bed for us."

"No, I love it."

Star looked around, utterly enchanted by the luxurious room. She couldn't believe she would be living in such a lovely space.

"I thought you didn't like it. For tonight, you'll stay with me. If you're not comfortable sharing the bed, we can get another one set up tomorrow."

"I don't need another bed. That would be an inconvenience. I'll sleep with you."

Lindsey looked slightly miffed at Star's response.

"Consider this your home. You don't need to be overly polite."

"No, I really do like it."

Despite everyone's insistence that she voice her preferences, Star, as the newcomer, knew better than to overstep.

She feared that if she was too demanding, she might lose this newfound home.

"Alright. Let's play with some toys. This doll here is my favorite."

Lindsey clearly cherished her toy collection, knowing each one by name.

Many of them were still in pristine condition.

Initially, Star was a bit hesitant, but with the common ground of play, they soon bonded.

Watching the two children play from the doorway, Melissa felt a sense of relief.

Prior to bringing Star home, she was concerned that Lindsey and Merrick might resent Star's sudden intrusion, viewing her as competition for attention.

Those fears now seemed unfounded.

Lindsey and Merrick had readily accepted Star, treating her as part of the family and a friend.

Star became everyone's favorite.

Merrick and Lindsey cared deeply for their new sister, sharing their toys and treats with her.

Having grown up in a relatively impoverished region, Star had never been exposed to such an abundance of toys and food.

At times, she had to pinch herself to confirm it wasn't a dream.

When bedtime arrived, Melissa brought in a quilt for her.

The two little girls chatted away merrily in bed.

Melissa tucked them in and left the room.

"How is Star? Has she adjusted?" Everett asked.

"Quite well," Melissa responded.

Everett commented, "That's good."

He glanced down at Melissa and asked, "And how about us?"

