

Chapter 661 Become Reconciled

At that moment, a knock echoed at the door.

Without having to ask, Merrick knew the visitor's identity.

"Come in. If there's any bad blood between you two, sort it out yourselves."

As someone stepped inside, Merrick quietly left the room.

Star was also aware of who had come in. Although her eyes were fixed on her math assignment, her concentration faltered.

"Star, I apologize. I shouldn't have lost my temper with you today, nor should I have meddled with your relationship with Mr. Mayfield. I was being small-minded," Lindsey confessed sincerely.

The pen in Star's hand dropped onto the table.

Had Lindsey really taken the initiative to apologize?

Star had always known Lindsey as the favorite, accustomed to her entitled and capricious attitude. so Lindsey's sudden humility left her surprised.

"Star? Don't you want to forgive me?" Lindsey sighed. "I've thought about it. I realize I've been too self-centered. I've treated my kindness towards you as a charity, believing you should obey me since I've given you so much, and that this home is solely mine."

After a pause, she went on, "But that was wrong. This place is also your home. We are equals, and you're also my best friend. I promise to make an effort to change myself, to get rid of these negative traits."

Her tone was earnest. After she finished speaking, she raised her head

Star had always known Lindsey as the favorite, accustomed to her entitled and capricious attitude. so Lindsey's sudden humility left her surprised.

"Star? Don't you want to forgive me?" Lindsey sighed. "I've thought about it. I realize I've been too self-centered. I've treated my kindness towards you as a charity, believing you should obey me since I've given you so much, and that this home is solely mine."

After a pause, she went on, "But that was wrong. This place is also your home. We are equals, and you're also my best friend. I promise to make an effort to change myself, to get rid of these negative traits."

Her tone was earnest. After she finished speaking, she raised her head to gauge Star's reaction.

Star remained in her initial position, back turned to Lindsey.

Lindsey finally realized that anger often came with consequences, some of which were irreversible.

Feeling dejected, she was about to leave.

But suddenly, Star abruptly got up from her chair, grabbing her pen and assignment from the table.

In shock, Lindsey uttered, "Star?"

Star looked at Lindsey and said, "Let's go. I can't solve some math problems. Please help me."

Tears of joy welled up in Lindsey's eyes. She wrapped her arms around Star's neck and planted a kiss on her cheek.

"I'm so relieved you've forgiven me, Star!"

Touching her nose, Star replied, "That's all behind us. Let's drop it."

Lindsey nodded fervently. "Okay, we won't bring it up again. But for the math problems, it's better if you ask Merrick... I'm not good at math either..."

Star just shook her head in disbelief.

Later that day, Melissa prepared a meal comprising the children's favorite dishes.

"Little ones, you did great today, so I've prepared something special for you."

"Awesome!"

Lindsey clapped her hands in delight.

Patting Lindsey's and Star's heads, Melissa said, "You two are good friends. Try not to fight in the future. Today, your kindergarten teacher asked if you two are getting along well."

Grasping Star's arm, Lindsey immediately replied, "Of course, we are! We'll live happily ever after!"

Merrick almost choked on his waffle. Wiping his forehead, he corrected Lindsey. "That's not quite right, Lindsey. You can't live together forever. You're not spouses; you're just good friends."

Lindsey nodded, not fully grasping what he meant.

She turned to Star with a smile. "Then, here's to our everlasting friendship!"

Melissa had sold the hospital, as she couldn't manage the additional workload while taking care of the children.

As for school, she only had five classes a week and could choose when to conduct them.

She usually held her classes from Monday to Tuesday morning.

Today, upon arriving at work, she was met with a flurry of chatter in the office.

"Did you hear? Our school has received an investment!"

