

Chapter 666 The Principal Defends Melissa

With a slight curl of her lips, Melissa said softly, "That gentleman uttered an impolite remark first. How is it my fault? If there's a need for an apology, he should be the one to offer it. Why should I be the one to apologize?"

Beads of cold sweat formed on the principal's forehead. How could she have the audacity to request an apology from Everett? How could someone of such high stature possibly apologize to a seemingly insignificant woman?

It seemed impossible to him!

When the principal failed to convince Melissa, Everett eventually approached them.

Upon seeing Everett, the principal instinctively went in front of Melissa and offered an apology.

"Mr. Mayfield, she is new here. She may lack experience, but she is an outstanding teacher. Please don't hold it against her."

Everett's expression turned into a frown as he said icily, "Step aside. I need to speak with her alone."

Ever since he approached, his gaze remained fixed on Melissa.

His eyes resembled a deep, dark hole. They were terrifying and filled with an unsettling sense of the unfathomable.

Upon learning Everett intended to have a private conversation with Melissa, the principal grew increasingly agitated.

Melissa was consumed by anger. The principal was worried about the possibility of her saying something unpleasant later on. If Everett were to become angry again, everything could potentially be ruined.

It was rumored this man would not accept such offenses from ordinary individuals and many who dared insult him had met their untimely demise.

Contemplating this, the principal trembled with concern. Anxious he said, "If you have something to say to her, you can tell me instead. As her senior and principal I take responsibility for whatever mistakes she may have made. Consider me as her guardian or parent figure. After all, when a child misbehaves, the parents are held accountable. She is under my supervision as my subordinate, and the same principle applies."

Melissa was startled by the unexpected action of the conscientious principal who stepped forward to defend her during this crucial moment. His behavior was a surprise to her.

Perhaps Melissa had held preconceived notions or biases against the principal in the past.

She experienced feelings of guilt and worried Everett might unjustly blame such a genuinely good principal.

"You don't have to shield me from him."

When he heard this, the principal's expression shifted. He turned his gaze towards Melissa, and whispered unhappily to her.

"Don't say anything else." His voice was filled with frustration. "If you don't wish to be treated unfairly, what options do I have? The only thing I can do now is assist you in avoiding him. You can make a swift getaway by using the restroom as an excuse. The other executives and I will be present, and he won't dare take any action against you."

What might Melissa say at this moment? Melissa's predominant emotion was gratitude towards the principal's genuine kindness.

She appeared to grasp the principal's analogy earlier on.

Everett was taken by surprise when he realized the principal was too obstinate to step aside.

He furrowed his brow. "Are you blocking my path because you're concerned I might harm her? Do you believe that I am that unreasonable?"

"Well, certainly not."

"I simply have a preference that you refrain from speaking to her in private," the principal responded.

Everett had never encountered someone so unyielding before.

What could he say to convince the principal he had no intention of

To alleviate the principal's concerns, he needed to reassure him first.
