

Chapter 669 An Excellent Principal

Melissa smiled in return. "When the principal stood up for me in that moment, I genuinely didn't anticipate he would exhibit such support for his staff members."

He was truly distinct from the previous principal in many ways.

This place truly evoked a sense of home for her, a space where she could settle down to work, rather than solely focusing on fame and wealth.

Everett nodded in agreement. "However, there's one thing that slightly bothers me. He had you accompany guests. Is that something you did frequently in the past?"

Melissa rolled her eyes at him. "What do you think? How dare you mock me in front of others just now? Who do you think you were mocking?"

Everett touched his nose. "I was feeling jealous at that moment."

Melissa could empathize with how he must have felt in that moment.

As time went by, they leisurely strolled through various locations.

Along their journey, Melissa and Everett garnered significant attention. After all, the combination of their good looks and apparent compatibility made them a striking couple.

"This school is quite expansive. When I look at the youthful faces of these students, it makes me realize that I'm getting older."

Upon hearing his words, Melissa smiled. "How could you ever consider yourself old? You always attract attention wherever you go. Didn't you notice those male college students who just passed by? They all seemed to feel inferior in comparison to you."

Everett was unsure whether Melissa was praising him or teasing him.

Nevertheless, he chose to interpret it as a form of praise.

"Do the children need anything? I'll come by another day to visit them. I'd like to buy them some gifts."

Melissa remained silent for a few seconds before she spoke. "In truth, I know the children still love you. If they truly didn't care about you, they wouldn't have been so upset about what you did in the past."

In fact, Everett felt the same way Melissa did. The children did love him, but he couldn't deny he had behaved poorly in the past, causing them significant harm.

"If you truly wish for them to forgive you, I have a plan."

When he heard this, Everett's eyes sparkled with excitement.

"What is the plan? Tell me what it is. I will definitely do it."

He sounded urgent, as if reconciling with the two children was his utmost priority at that moment.

In fact, Melissa initially had reservations about allowing Everett to get too close to the children.

After all, the children still held him responsible for what transpired in the past. Excessive interference might only deepen their resentment towards him.

However, she could sense his genuine desire to be a good father. Thus, they couldn't postpone it any longer.

So Melissa briefly described the plan to him.

As Everett departed, the school principal and other leaders bid him farewell with warm and cordial wishes.

After Everett's car disappeared from sight, the other leaders exchanged perplexed glances.

"Hasn't Ms. Sherman messed things up? Why did he agree to invest in our school? When did he become so kind?"

After all, it was rumored that those who had previously offended him were no longer around in Andeport.

The principal smiled contentedly. He knew that apart from himself, no one else was aware of the true reason behind Everett's investment.

He stroked his beard on his chin with a meaningful expression.

"If it weren't for Melissa, we wouldn't have obtained this investment."
