Vivienne's eyes welled with tears as she nodded.

"Yes. I can tell that Melissa is trying to give me lots of time with Lindsey," she said.

"Well, Melissa and our son are together again, and now we just need to get the two kids to accept him again. Why did you bring Star back here? If it weren't for her, we wouldn't have ended up in such a difficult situation," Johnny said.

Vivienne glared at him as she heard his calloused words.

"Keep your voice down. Don't let Star hear you."

Johnny scoffed, "I'm in my own home. Why should I be careful?"

"You don't know how sensitive that girl is. I was speaking alone with Lindsey today, and it made her so upset that she wanted to run away from home. Fortunately, Lindsey and I found her before anything happened. If she had left, there's no way Lindsey would have come back with me today."

Johnny snorted apathetically. "I don't agree with Melissa about adopting her. We already have two children in the family. Once Everett and Melissa settle down, they may even consider having another child. If that happens, how will we have the energy to take care of her?"

"Enough. Don't speak like that again. I need you to be nice to Star in front of Lindsey. Otherwise, what will she think of you?"

Vivienne knew what would get Johnny to calm his rampage, and, as she thought, his face became more peaceful.

"Okay, I got it. No matter how much I hate that kid, I'm not going to show it for at least a few days."

Vivienne breathed a sigh of relief as she heard his promise.

What mattered most to them now was to bond with Lindsey during her stay there.

The next day, Vivienne approached Lindsey's room early in the morning requesting that they get up.

Lindsey rubbed her sleepy eyes, slipping on large slippers and walking to the door. "Grandma, it's only six o'clock. Why are you waking us up so early?"

"I plan to take you to see Merrick today. Don't you miss him?"

It turned out that Vivienne called for them to wake to see Merrick, and Lindsey's eyes suddenly lit up in anticipation. "When are we leaving? I want to go see my brother now."

All sleepiness left Lindsey's body, and she was suddenly invigorated and ready to start the day. She began to pester Vivienne to take her to Merrick immediately.

"I knew you'd be too excited to sleep, so I didn't tell you yesterday. Now go wash up and get dressed. I'll take you there after breakfast."

"Alright."

Lindsey rushed back into the bedroom, running around to get ready.

Star also ended up rising from her slumber, getting ready with Lindsey.

When the two of them arrived at the dining room, Star saw Johnny, and immediately bowed her head deeply, attempting to hide herself from his gaze.

Lindsey grabbed Star's hand as she noticed her reaction to seeing Johnny.

"Don't worry, I'm here. He won't do anything to you," Lindsey promised her quietly, patting her chest in solidarity.

Star could read her lips, feeling slightly relieved. She gave a small nod, following Lindsey into the dining room.
