

Chapter 1357 Trudy's Anger

After activating the sword array, Shiloh leaped into the most energy-intensive part—the eye of the formation—and called out urgently, "Liam, Trudy, into the formation's eye now! We can't delay, or we won't make it!"

Liam and Trudy, already poised for action, quickly joined him as the sword formation enveloped them.

At Shiloh's command, the trio funneled their primogem energy into the core of the formation.

This energy coursed through the formation diagram, materializing as a massive golden sword before Shiloh.

This iteration of the golden sword was significantly larger than last time—over ten times the size before. And its power had increased just as dramatically.

In the past, when they had been mere Primogem Warriors, they could severely wound a Primogem-Expert-level spark beast with this formation. Now, they had become Primogem Experts; dealing with adversaries of similar strength should pose no issue.

The decision to deploy such a potent maneuver was driven by the fact that the number of Titan Bugs had been increasing nonstop.

Using the sword formation was not without risks—it would leave them significantly drained. It was a desperate gambit: succeed and survive, or fail and face dire consequences.

While channeling his primogem energy into the formation, Liam carefully modulated his contribution. He calculated the precise amount of energy needed to annihilate all the Titan Bugs in one decisive strike.

He did this because he needed to conserve enough strength for any unforeseen challenges that might leave Trudy and Shiloh vulnerable.

He was acutely aware of the possibility of more formidable enemies lurking unseen. Conserving his strength would help save Shiloh's and Trudy's lives later.

With the formation activated, a potent sword aura surged skyward.

Shiloh, with veins pronounced on his face from the strain, directed the enormous golden sword toward the swarm of bugs.

The blade's light sliced through the valley floor, causing the surrounding rocks to tremble.

The sword mowed down the Titan Bugs with ruthless efficiency, annihilating them in a single sweeping blow.

After one swift motion, the valley was cleared of the Titan Bugs.

Seeing the threat vanquished, Shiloh and Trudy exhaled deeply in relief.

They were nearly depleted of primogem energy, feeling completely drained.

As the focal point of the formation, Shiloh had expended the most energy and was noticeably pale and shaky on his feet.

In contrast, Liam, having managed his primogem energy cautiously, had the best condition.

While Shiloh surveyed the dead Titan Bugs, Trudy noticed Liam's less fatigued state, and irritation flared within her.

She scoffed and taunted Liam, "Liam, you are such a coward! My brother and I poured everything into this fight to keep us all safe. And you? You held back while we risked everything! My brother trusts you so much, and this is how you repay his trust?"
