

Chapter 1522 Proposal For Duel

Hilliard was already extremely displeased that Liam received the best reward.

And to everyone's surprise, Liam also received a bonus reward—one that was exceptionally generous.

It was worth noting that although Hilliard and his companions were regarded as top talents in their respective planetary systems, none of them had yet reached the rank of a First-level Warrior within the military camp.

Among the four, Alexis had accumulated the highest military credits. However, even he had barely surpassed five hundred credits—still far from the threshold required to become a First-level Warrior.

Envious glances were cast in Liam's direction.

Compared to the 1000 military credits Liam had received, the 500 days of free training seemed far less enticing.

Military credits were directly tied to a soldier's status within the army. The more credits one amassed, the higher their rank, and a higher rank secured not only prestige but also privileges throughout the four major galaxies.

Earning these credits often came at great personal risk, as they required putting one's life on the line.

Naturally, people envied Liam for receiving such rewards.

Yet, Gabriela, Cataleya, and Alexis bore no displeasure.

They understood that the Network of Human Sovereign was just and impartial in distributing task rewards and determining rankings.

Even Caden, the Lord of Rosefinch, held no power to manipulate the task rewards. His authority only extended to assisting with the distribution of tasks for the Network of Human Sovereign.

In other words, Liam had rightfully earned his rewards.

While Cataleya and her companions acknowledged this, it didn't mean Hilliard, who harbored deep animosity toward Liam, felt the same.

Liam's receipt of the bonus reward was the final straw for Hilliard.

His face twisted in fury, and, unable to contain his anger, he shouted in front of Caden, "This is impossible! How could this loser deserve a bonus? Lord of Rosefinch, I demand a duel with Liam in the Human Sovereign Arena! I question the validity of his so-called achievements!"

Caden was momentarily shocked by Hilliard's outburst.

Even Winfred, standing nearby, looked stunned.

Both were well aware of Liam's abilities.

Among the five members of the task force, there might have been room to doubt the merits of others, but Liam's skills were beyond reproach.

No one could fathom what had come over Hilliard for him to challenge Liam so abruptly.

However, as the Lord of Rosefinch, Caden knew he had to remain impartial in front of the gathered crowd.

Nonetheless, he had a solution for this.

Caden turned to Liam and asked, his tone measured, "Liam, do you accept Hilliard's challenge?"

Though Caden firmly believed that Hilliard stood no chance against Liam, he recognized the futility of such a confrontation. He believed this would only be a waste of time for Liam.

So, he had asked Liam that question, wanting him to decline.

He believed if Liam refused, his authority would ensure that Hilliard dared not press the matter further, no matter how deep his dissatisfaction ran.

To Caden's surprise, Liam met his gaze with a calm yet resolute expression. Nodding, he replied, "Lord of Rosefinch, I accept Hilliard's challenge. This is a matter we agreed upon during our time in the secret realm."
