Chapter 128

“Go get the veterinarian! Pichard was so furious that the eyes were red mid-splitting.

The keeper behind him was devastated, and the more he thought about it, the more afraid he became.

Finally, Richard yelled at him, snapping him out of his fear.

“Tell people to go to other sections and stop all the food and water! Figure out what other places had gone wrong.

The keeper nodded, “Okay, I’m on it.

The veterinarian rushed over, and when he saw the lion colors, he knew he could do nothing to help them.

Due to limited conditions, he could not perform X-rays and ultrasounds. He could only collect some blood to check their body temperature and breathing.

He squatted on the ground and checked on them all.

Time passed by. His eyebrows wrinkled, and the sweat from his forehead soaked his hair.

After bracing himself for a long time, he raised his head and said dryly, “There’s nothing I can do. They’re already dead...

Upon hearing that, Richard felt dizzy,

He staggered a step back, and the bodyguard hurriedly supported him.

“Grandpa!” Yvonne got down from the arms of another bodyguard, hugged Richard’s leg, and looked worried.

She asked anxiously, “Grandpa, what’s wrong with you?*

At this time, the keeper, who had been to other places for statistics, also returned.

His face was pale, and he hesitated to say anything.

Finally, he took a piece of paper and showed it to Richard with a total of more than a dozen parks on it. And most of them were marked in red.

The moment he saw this piece of paper, Richard felt his stomach cramp, and it hurt.

His face turned blue, and his vision began to blur.

Suddenly, something warm flowed down from his right leg.

It was as if on a snowy winter night, when he was frozen stiff, a cup of hot cocoa suddenly flowed down his throat, warming his limbs and bones.

He was gradually able to see clearly, and the unbearable pain in his body was fading.

The bodyguards supported him from both sides. And when he took control of his body, Richard looked down at his right leg.

The delicate and pretty little girl was tearful, and her big, bright eyes were full of worries about him.

Her soft hands clutched Richard’s pants tightly, her eyes were red, and the pearl-like tears fell directly to the ground without touching her cheeks. “Grandpa, Grandpa, don’t die...”

Richard was stunned and helplessly raised his hand to rub Yvonne’s head. “Yvonne, I’m not dead yet.”

Yvonne wiped her tears, her eyelashes wet and stained.

She knew why Richard had become like this, and after wiping away her tears, she pointed at the lions behind her and said softly. Grandpa, don’t be upset. The big cats are still alive.”

Richard looked at the group of motionless lions, his lips straightened.

The veterinarian said. “Miss Adler, I’ve checked all those lions and can’t hear their heartbeats. They’re all dead.”

The veterinarian frowned. Although he knew Yvonne was trying to cheer Richard up, she could pout and act cute. How could she tell him the lions were still alive?

Wouldn’t it be more cruel to give Richard hope and make him despair?

Sure enough, Yvonne was a three-year-old child and probably wanted praise from others.

The veterinarian shook his head with a complicated thought, ‘Oh, child’s play!’

Yvonne was stunned by the long sentence, and after trying to get its meaning, she quickly waved her hand. “No, no!”

Yvonne looked up at Richard and explained softly and earnestly, “Grandpa, they can still live, just like Charles’s jasmine.”

The veterinarian interrupted, “Miss Adler, flowers are flowers, and animals are animals! I know you are filial and don’t want to make Mr. Adler sad, but you can’t joke about this.”

Perhaps it was because he had asserted the lions were dead, so he was irritated when he heard Yvonne’s remarks provoking his professionalism.

Richard’s face darkened in displeasure, and he glanced at the emotional veterinarian.

He was about to say something to defend Yvonne when the latter spoke first.

She stared at the veterinarian like an angry cat, with anger in her soft, sweet voice, and yelled at him fiercely, “You shut up!”

As soon as she said that, everyone became quiet and stared blankly at the angry little girl.

Her cheeks were bulging, and her little face was red with anger. “Why do you keep interrupting me?”

“I... The veterinarian’s face turned red. “I’m also worried Mr. Adler will fall sick during the mood swings.”

A gust of wind blew up the hair on the top of Yvonne’s head, and of course, she might be so mad that her hair stood on end.

She stood still, a flush of anger appearing on her tender cheeks, and she frowned delicately, fiercely.

She turned to Richard, “Grandpa, don’t worry. They’re sick. I’ll save them.”

After she said that, Richard was moved.

Although Yvonne may be joking, he was willing to believe that.

However, the veterinarian was speechless. ‘What’s gotten into me to have argued with a three-year-old child?’

Thinking of this, he withdrew his gaze and confessed his mistake to Yvonne perfunctorily.

He began, “I’m sorry, Miss Adler. I said something wrong. I admit those lions are still alive, and you saved Mr. Adler.”

Yvonne felt something was wrong but couldn’t figure out what it was.

After this annoying person apologized, she became even more angry!

Her soft and childlike voice said word by word, “I can save them!”

The veterinarian curled his lips. Although he knew Yvonne was a child, he wanted to talk back when he saw her talking big regardless.

He opened his mouth, but before the words of sarcasm came out, a cold gaze fell on him.

The veterinarian gasped and turned his head stiffly.

Richard’s weathered eyes were like bottomless cold pools, and when they locked gaze, it made people feel that even breathing became extremely difficult.

It was just that there was no time to waste time on him, and Richard’s words were short and impatient. “I’ve been too kind to you for so many years. Pack up and get out of Tiger Mountain.”

When facing Richard, the veterinarian couldn’t even feel resentment in his heart.

His heart beat like thunder, and his face was as pale as a ghost. “Yes, yes, I’ll leave immediately...

After saying that, he staggered and fled.

After the veterinarian left, the Lion Garden became much quieter.

Richard’s fierce look gradually became gentle, and finally, he put his hand lightly on Yvonne’s head.

“Don’t be mad, Yvonne. If I don’t come with you in the future, you can tell whoever messes with you to get lost.”

Yvonne nodded. “Okay!”

The anger on Yvonne’s face faded, and she nodded obediently.

“Okay, let’s get out of here,” suggested Richard.

Richard glanced at the lions, sighed deeply, and ordered the people around him in a sad voice. “Tell the people below to hurry up and send all the animals for inspection, including the dead ones.”

After that, he led Yvonne to other gardens.

But Yvonne didn’t move. Under Richard’s puzzled eyes, her little face was full of determination, and she clenched her little hand tightly.

She said, “Grandpa, go out and wait for me.”

“What?” Richard was puzzled. “Yvonne, wh are you doing here alone?”

Yvonne didn’t say anything. She raised her hand to push Richard’s leg and urged him to move forward. “Go out, Grandpa, please.”

She thought, ‘Dad says no one can see it, so after I push Grandpa out, no one will see it.’

Richard looked confused.

Yvonne grunted and pushed him hard for a long time, but she didn’t make him move at all.

That was quite sad.

Thinking of this, Richard took two steps forward in cooperation and walked out of the gate of the Lion Garden.
