Chapter 295

Chapter 295

hist now, the princess wanted to play with them, so he was being gentle.

Now that he wavileterminated to leave, how could a few children stop him!

He wasn't wearing high heels and ran very fast..

The dress he was wearing was indeed gorgeous. Gale was quite generous. This dress cost 45 thousand dollars and was very
But several diamonds had already fallen off it, and he didn't know if he needed to pay for them.

The debt-ridden runaway "princess" felt his scalp tingle at the thought of paying for it.

But then he thought, Thankfully, my sense of morality isn't that strong. He hung the dress in the changing room, put on his clothes, and walked out, thinking that even if someone had to pay for it, it had nothing to do with him.

On the lawn in the courtyard, the two little girls were still trying to recall who that princess was.

After this incident, they lost interest in the other princesses. So they sat on a bench nearby, chatting.

Yvonne swung her chubby legs, rested her chin on her tiny hand, and looked up thoughtfully.

That wink, which had only struck her as dazzling when she first saw it, now seemed more familiar as she thought about it

She had a familiar feeling as if she had seen it somewhere before.

Anna was analyzing beside her. She had a better memory than Yvonne and said with a straight face, "Yvonne, when I was standing next to her just now, I felt she was a little taller than the other princesses.

And she runs very fast! After thinking for a while, Anna remembered another key point, turned to Yvonne, leaned closer to her ear, and whispered, "Didn't you think her voice sounded a little like a boy's?"

These words enlightened the troubled Yvonne. Her eyes lit up, and a picture appeared in her mind.

It was a long time ago when she first saw Hudson's brother.

At that time, Hudson's brother still had white hair, and he winked at Yvonne with a smile, which made her dizzy for a long time.

That wink overlapped with the wink the princess had just given her. Although their faces looked slightly different, their charm was almost the same.

She remembered. She remembered it all.

Yvonne turned her head, her tone a little excited, and hurriedly shared the news with Anna Anna, I know who she is."

Anna, who was still seriously analyzing just now, curiously leaned over. "Who is it?"

Yvonne's tone was firm, and she said with bright eyes. "It's Hudson's brother."

The impact of this truth was overwhelming. Anna was so shocked that her lips trembled, and her mouth fell open in astonishment.

She had also met Hudson's brother, a very handsome boy.

Comparing his figure with the princess here just now, she realized the two were indeed very similar.

She felt that her guess was quite logical Looking at the name Yvonne beside her, she moved over and sold one her Anna said, "I didn't expect to run into him here. Do you remember when Hadson and that his brother was boy today se didn't have time to bring him here?

Yvonne nodded obediently, remembering the things that had happened near her.

Anna felt like she had discovered the truth. She sighed. "The situation to be a princess here, and he didn't want Hudson to know his work.

The two kind little girls began to feel guilty for pulling on his skirt earlier and not letting him go back

"Should we tell Hudson? Yvonne asked softly

She thought it was something worth boasting about. She thought, Earlier, many children from our class surrounded him. and everyone liked Gabriel very much. If they know that the fairytale princess they like is Hudson's brother, Hudson will be even more popular in class

Yvonne thought she would tell everyone if she had such a beautiful older sister

But Anna shook her head, thinking. Although I also feel that having such a handsome brother is something to be proud of Hudson's thoughts might not be the same as ours

"Since Gabriel doesn't want us to tell anyone, let's not say anything" Holding Yvonne's soft little hand. Anna said thoughtfully. "Let's keep it a secret for him"

"Okay" Yvonne agreed.

After their discussion, Grave, who had been gone for half an hour, found them.

Having just been scolded, Grave's already gloomy face darkened even more, and as he approached, half of the children around Yvonne and Anna ran away.

Anna also wanted to run away with Yvonne, but then she remembered that Grave had mental problems, so she stood there kindly, not moving

Anna couldn't help but think. It's not that he wanted to be this way. It's because he was suffering from an illness that made him appear berce to others. If he hadn't been ill, he would probably have been as lively and cheerful as everyone else around him.

The two little girls looked up at him, their attitudes changing quickly, their voices filled with concern. "Mr. Sterling, are you here to see us again?"

Although they found it annoying to have Grave around, they could bear it so he could earn more money to see a doctor.

Perhaps he didn't expect the two little girls to treat him so kindly, but Cease's expression slightly changed.

He had wanted to carry the two girls back, like the previous two times, but such a friendly attitude made for m tidimir

Unexpectedly, the two little girls sitting on the bench huddled together and whispered something the mood aptand in hand and turned their backs to him.

Yvonne turned her head and said softly. You can carry us. Mr. Sterling. We won't move around"

Grave was at a loss for words.

In the end, he wasn't that rude after all. Instead, he chose to hold them both, one on each side her picking them up befeh much of the despondency clinging to him had been dispelled.

He sighed in his heart. 'Children are beautiful creatures. No wonder even Tinley has become a child-love

Thinking of this, he suddenly heard Yvonne, circled in his right hand, say warmly. "Mr. Sterling, we need to apriceses you. We didn't know your brain was sick before."

Grave felt confused. What? Whose brain is sick?"
