

Abandoned Super Cutie Adopted by Billionaire Clan

Chapter 49

Chapter 49

It was noon, and there were few cars on the road. The zoo's car came faster than Kelvin and the others had expected.

Because the 700 staff were worried that the Pallas's cat would hurt someone, they were in a hurry along the way. When they arrived, the Adler family had yet to finish hunc h

When they entered, the staff smelled the rich fragrance of food. Although they had just finished lunch, they got hungry again.

They all wondered what the Adler family was eating that smelled so good.

The staff were all distracted, mainly because the fragrance made them unable to focus.

The leader of the group was also hungry. However, when he thought of the important business they were there for, he cleared his throat and reprimanded in a low voice, "Don't just stand there. Hurry up and catch the Pallas's cat"

Kelvin walked up to them.

After he closed the curtains, the little Pallas's cat ran off to another place.

Since the Adler family's place was huge, it was really not easy to find the Pallas's cat.

"Mr. Adler, I'm really sorry to have troubled you," the leading zoo employee said with an embarrassed smile.

"We only found out that it was missing this morning, and we posted a notice on X to get everyone to help search. I didn't expect it to run to your house." After saying that, he carefully asked the main point. "By the way, it didn't hurt you, right?"

Kelvin's expression was calm as he said no.

The Pallas's cat's name was Robin. Now the zoo staff were looking for it everywhere, shouting its name. "Robin! We're here to bring you back!

To be honest, the scene was a little funny.

The leader seemed to have felt it too. He scratched his head and said awkwardly. The netizens voted and we gave it this name. Robin is quite an internet celebrity in our zoo.

Kelvin's voice was calm as he said unhurriedly, "It was drooling from hunger just now. You can use food to lure it out."

The leader was stunned and wondered, Drooling from hunger? Mr. Adler must be exaggerating it!

Because Robin had noticed that it was loved by the visitors, it was extremely picky when it came to eating in the zoo. It did not eat anything that was not fresh. When it got upset sometimes, it did not even eat fresh food.

As the Pallas's cats were loners, the staff tried their best to make Robin eat every day, afraid that it would starve to death.

Inside the house, Jeremy was too full to eat anymore. He said that he was finished to Yvonne, stood up, and walked outside to watch the people looking for the Pallas's cat.

Yvonne was also full. She slid down from the chair and ran behind Jeremy.

No one noticed that a small gray figure swooshed to the dining table.

It gulped down the food so hurriedly as if it hadn't eaten for years.

The dining table was in a mess.

The nanny who came to clear the table was a bit short-sighted.

From afar, she thought that the puppy at home had climbed onto the table. When she got closer, she realized that it was a cat-like creature.

She was thinking. This figure... In't it the Pallas's cat that the zoo staff are looking for?

The nanny screamed and shied away from the Pallas's cat for fear it would attack.

She shouted. It's here! It's secretly eating the leftovers!"

Her shout attracted the attention of everyone outside.

Everyone had different expressions on their faces when they saw the hungry Pallas's cat eating everything on the dining table.

"What the.." Jeremy was stunned for two seconds before he remembered to take out his phone to record a video.

When Yvonne saw the soup and vegetable leaves on its fur, she instantly felt that she did not like it that much anymore.

Coincidentally, the Pallas's cat was holding a chicken in its mouth. It looked ferocious as it stared intently in the direction of Yvonne

The little girl cried out and quickly hugged Kelvin's leg tightly. She hid behind him timidly and stuck her head out to peek.

The zoo staff were stunned, and their jaws were about to drop since they saw that Robin was no longer picky about food as it used to be in the zoo.

"Robin?" someone shouted with a trembling voice.

The Pallas's cat looked up at them with wary eyes.

Someone yelled. "It really is Robin!"

The leader said "what are you waiting for? Hurry up and catch it

Seeing through their intentions, the Pallas's eat jumped up and down with the chicken in its mouth, dripping soup all over the ground.

Kelvin looked away because he couldn't stand the mess anymore.

If not for the fact that Yvonne was hugging his leg, he would have walked out long ago to get the scene out of sight and our of mind.

The staff chased after the Pallas's cat for more than 20 minutes before finally capturing the famous Robin

When it was caught, it was still holding the half-eaten chicken in its mouth.

One could imagine how awkward the leader would be.

The house was a mess, and the chairs were all over the place.

"Mr., Mr. Adler, please get your men to count the losses. We will compensate you. As for the cleaning fees. As the leader spoke, he was extremely afraid.

However, Kelvin did not make things difficult for him. He looked at the captured Pallas's cat and quickly looked away. "Okay Please take it away now."

"Alright." With that, the leader waved his hand and got his staff to quickly put Robin in the cage

At that moment.

t, a staff tried to take out the half-eaten chicken from its mouth, but he was scratched.

He dodged quickly. Because he wearing a jacket, his injury was not very serious.

The Pallas's cat looked at them warily. Whenever someone tried to take the chicken from its mouth, it would give them a vicious scratch.

The

staff looked at the leader with a troubled expression.

"Whatever. Just put the chicken in the cage as well, the leader said helplessly.

Jeremy recording the video beside him made a curious sound. "It just had lunch here, and now it's leaving with takeout food?"

The leader's face instantly turned red.

He looked at Kelvin awkwardly.

"Well... Mr. Adler, we'll compensate you for this meal." The content is on

"That won't be necessary." Kelvin's eyes were indifferent.

Just like that, the zoo staff left the Adler family in an awkward mood.

When they returned to the zoo, they took Robin for a check-up. They could only release it back to the Pallas's cat house after the checkup.

During the check-up, Robin still refused to put down the drumstick in its mouth.

No matter how the vet tried to persuade Robin, it wouldn't work. It kept holding the drumstick in its mouth without eating it.

It looked like a disobedient brat.

Pallas's cats were protected animals, so the vet couldn't hit Robin.

The vet held back his anger and finished the checkup. Then, he bathed Robin.

Throughout the entire process, as long as he touched its drumstick, Robin would scratch him.

After the vet confirmed that there were no problems, Robin was sent back to the Pallas's cat house.

The Pallas's cats, who were usually loners, came out at the same time.

Robin placed the drumstick on the ground. The group of Pallas's cats went crazy and tried to snatch it.

One of the Pallas's cats said, "It's so yummy."

Another one asked. "Where did you hunt and get it?"

Another Pallas's cat said. "You've finished it already? I'm so hungry."

Robin raised its head high. "I got it from a human's house. I'll go there tomorrow. Who will come with me?"

Instantly, all the Pallas's cats took a step forward.

The fox house next door was also restless.

When the staff member who was watching the monitor saw this scene,

he craned his neck in shock. "What?

Robin has become the king?" The
