

The Deadly 124

Chapter 124 It's Not His Turn to Bully Others.

Henry found himself baffled by the recent actions of Dominic, the president of SunEast Bank.

The Dunns influence in Harmonfield was undeniable.

As a private financial institution in Harmonfield, SunFast Bank should have ideally shown some support for the Dunns in such a sensitive moment, Yet, without notifying Shirley, Dominic chose to complicate matters for Robin, the CEO of the Dunns Eastvale Development Group, concerning the loan arrangement tied to Infinity Tower. His behavior seemed a bit low-minded.

Gordon noticed Henry's perplexed expression and said. "Apparently, a prominent figure within the Dunns sent word to Dominic, asking him not to make any exceptions for Jonah. "Meanwhile, there's a deep internal conflict within the Dunns over the acquisition of commercial land at Infinity Tower.

It's likely that Dominic misjudged the situation, leading to this puzzling action. He closed the repayment option early and moved to seal off Infinity Tower, which has likely infuriated Robin.

"Remarkably, Robin announced he would gather 3.8 billion in cash by midnight to settle the Infinity Tower loan—a cash repayment of that scale has never been attempted in Harmonfield's financial history.

"Now, Dominic faces a tough spot. Unable to backtrack on his decision, he's forced to accept Robin's repayment proposal. But raising 3.8 billion in cash within hours is next to impossible.

"Even if the Dunns pooled all available funds across their work, reaching 3.8 billion on such short notice would be unlikely. So, all eyes are on this showdown to see who will come out ahead.

"If Robin actually pulls off the 3.8 billion cash repayment by midnight, SunEast Bank's reputation could suffer. The bank might never recover its good image, and it could even lose much of its market presence in Harmonfield and possibly Brookhaven. "But if Robin can't meet his commitment, the Dunn Group will be publicly embarrassed, causing a significant plunge in their stock value.

"In any case, this fierce struggle brings a major drawback for Harmonfield."

Henry nodded thoughtfully. "It seems Dominic has made a critical error that could end his career. "Whether he comes out on top or not, the senior leaders at SunEast Headquarters likely won't keep him

"His vision is limited, given how contentious the Southvalend currently is—no wonder the Dunns' leadership is split in their views

"Gordon, do you have any insight into Mr. Dunn Sr.'s opinion on Robin's bid for Infinity Tower?"

Gordon replied, "Mr. Dunn Sr., along with his son Timothy and granddaughter Shirley, are all in favor of Hoban's takeover of Infinity Tower

"However, their support isn't about the building's value. It's rooted in loyalty because Robin is the Dunns

"The citizens of Harmonfield recognize the Dunns dedication to their allies, but the dozen major shareholders of the Dum Group might not share the same view.

"Some shareholders worry that Robin's approach could completely destabilize the foundation that the Dunns have carefully built over the years.

"At this crucial juncture, a deputy CEO from the Dunns, named Howard Dixon, apparently made a private call to Dominic.

"What they discussed isn't clear, but Dominic's advance decision to seal Infinity Tower might be tied to that call.

"Upon knowing that, Robin and Jonah rushed to SunEast Bank to discuss the matter. Dominic insisted that it would be impossible for Jonah and his team to repay the entire 3.8 billion in such a brief window through regr channels. "With Dominic standing firm on his position, Robin offered to repay the loan with 3.8 billion in cash.

After hearing the full story. Henry shook his head. "Dominic's vision does seem narrow! But 3.8 billion in cash?"

He frowned in deep thought.

That wasn't a small amount, and Robin would struggle to amass it all by midnight.

"Even if Robin had the right contacts and resources, most available cash had already been transferred to the treasury for safekeeping at this point.

Henry looked at Gordon and said, "Alright, I've got it now. You can go."

Gordon wanted to say something more, but Henry gestured for him to leave.

Once Gordon was out, Henry picked up his phone and called his younger brother. "Carson, where are you?"

At that moment, Carson was at home, sipping tea with Martin.

"I'm here with Dad, discussing plans for his recovery celebration," he replied. "I put together a team this afternoon to handle the event prep-they're working on the guest list and other details. I'll update you on what's done so far so you can review it." Henry paused on the line, then said, "Carson, let's deal with Dad's celebrationter. I called because Robin's in some trouble. Check out the trending news.

Carson frowned. "Robin is in trouble? Where is he?

"He's in Harmonfield."

"Henry, are you serious? How would Robin get into trouble in Harmonfield?" Carson chuckled.

Henry said seriously. I'm not joking with you. How much cash can you raise quickly? The more, the better.

"Cash? I never carry cash-what's going on?"

"Use every contact you have to pull together as much cash as you can. It's urgent."

"Okay, I'll go do it now."

"Got it." Carson hung up and quickly stood. Spotting his urgency, Martin asked, "Something wrong?"

Carson had already nced at the trending updates, piecing together Robin''s situation at SunEast Bank.

"Dad, SunEast is putting unfair pressure on Robin. We can''t let them bully him in Harmonfield!"

Martin nodded. "How much will you need? Let me know if you fall short."

Carson knew his father could manage the 3.8 billion needed with a few calls but decided to handle it himself first

"Not much. I''ll make a few calls and gather the funds. No need to worry. It''s not a big deal.

As he headed out, he crossed paths with Jack, who was just arriving.

"General Grayson. my father is waiting inside. I have to step out for a bit, Carson said.

Jack watched him leave, amused. "This kid is as busy as ever."

Inside, he turned to Martin. "What''s Carson so caught up in?"

"Do you remember the young man who helped with my health issues?" Martin asked.

Jack's eyes brightened. "Yes, I do. I came here today for that. What happened to him?"

Martin smiled. "He's got that fierce young energy, and it's ended him in a standoff with SunEast Bank.

"Because of a property deal in Southvale, they're pushing him to repay 3.8 billion by midnight and closed the usual channels early.

"He's gathering cash for it, which is causing quite a stir online.

Jack scanned his phone, his gaze fixed on Robin in a video clip. After a moment, he grew visibly excited.

"His demeanor-it reminds me of someone."

Martin caught Jack's expression. "What is it? What do you see?"

Jack's voice quivered. "Do you remember that man from the old days?"

"What?" Martin suddenly stood, quiet for a moment, then grabbed Jack's phone to zoom in on Robin's face.

"Jack, you think Robin has a connection to... him?"

Jack nodded. "I had a strange feeling the first time I met him. It's something deep, almost instinctive,

"He's bold, looks down on everyone, filled with an inborn strength. I see the same spirit in this young man."

Martin froze, almost spellbound.

Before him was the vivid memory of the war hero from decades past-the one they all looked up to, the legendary Dragon yer.