

The Growth 369

Chapter 369 - 15: Secrets of the True God

It turns out the upper echelons of the Mountain and Sea Civilization were much more cautious than Li Hao had imagined.

Facing a racial god with an unclear stance, unknown abilities, and an indistinct physical form, the Mountain and Sea Civilization had long treated the task of assimilating it as a "millennial plan."

The Secret Seekers did not rush to further explore the ecology of Yu Yuan but gradually withdrew from the range of the Azure Dragon Race under the protection of Fu Xiang and other reinforcements.

Until the thunderclouds of the Canglong no longer covered the frontline base of the Mountain and Sea Civilization.

Only then did the multitude of Mountain and Sea People at the front display their divine techniques, employing various means to spy and explore the intelligence on Yu Yuan.

Meanwhile, at the Mountain and Sea Civilization's rear, experts and scholars from various industries also began to study this unique epic creature, the Canglong.

First were the Azure Dragon vesicles brought back by the Secret Seekers.

With the detailed data and intelligence provided by Kuilong, these vesicles successfully hatched juvenile Canglongs.

After all, the lightning and thunder, which are extremely difficult for Canglongs to control, can be precisely regulated down to the amperage level with the support of Mountain and Sea Civilization technology.

Under such circumstances, stimulating the vesicles into differentiating into embryos with high-intensity sustained electrical currents posed no difficulty.

And once the embryos differentiated into juvenile Canglongs, the relevant experts and scholars further stimulated the Canglongs' bodies using electrical currents under Kuilong's guidance.

For ordinary organisms, forcibly stimulating a biological entity for secondary development using electric currents is undoubtedly an inversion of priorities that diminishes potential.

However, for the Canglongs, who are naturally shockingly adaptive to electric currents, this merely accelerated their growth.

Unlike Kuilong's simple and crude approach, the relevant personnel fed these Canglongs different foods according to their characteristics while stimulating them for secondary development.

It was proven that offering specific special substances to Canglongs during their secondary development allowed them to possess much stronger electric manipulation abilities after reaching adulthood.

The source of this powerful control not only lies within their storage cells but also comes from their scales with superconductive properties.

As the Canglongs further matured and began shedding their scales.

The scales with superconductive properties naturally became the source for the advancement of Mountain and Sea Civilization's electrical technology.

The "Sky City" project, which the Zhiku executives had been aspiring for, achieved breakthroughs due to the appearance of these superconducting scales.

Because superconductors allow an electric current to pass through without any loss.

The resultant electromagnetic field can repel the earth, keeping a giant city suspended in the sky for an extended period.

Of course, the "Sky City" envisioned by Zhiku executives was an airborne fortress capable of existing independently from the world—a self-sufficient small world.

Floating a giant city in the sky was merely the first step in realizing this vision.

Returning to the subject, after the Mountain and Sea People hatched those juvenile Canglongs, they did not tame them like beasts or domestic animals.

On the contrary, under Kuilong's strong leadership, these newborn Canglongs joined Mountain and Sea Civilization's schools for basic education.

There was no differential treatment, nor were special schools set up for Canglongs...

These Canglongs received universal primary education along with all members of the Hundred Races of Mountains and Seas, step by step.

During this process, the Canglongs exhibited extraordinarily high intelligence, distinct from most Mountain and Sea People, due to their brains developed through secondary stimulation.

Apart from a few races like Skeletons and the Nine-tailed Fox, known for their intellect, the intelligence level of the majority of Hundred Races of Mountains and Seas is inferior to these Canglongs.

Skeletons possess high intelligence due to the widespread use of flesh and blood armor, capable of generating artificial brains.

The Nine-tailed Fox reveals profound insight into knowledge and learning abilities due to their naturally powerful souls.

However, Canglongs differ in that their brains are purely highly developed and can temporarily enter an active state through continuous electrical stimulation.

Thus, this ability to significantly enhance learning status also became the second major change the Canglongs brought to the Mountain and Sea Civilization.

Many Mountain and Sea People interested in this watched to see if a similar function could be realized through certain special implants?

The specific results are yet to be mentioned, but the treatment of Canglongs has significantly improved as a result.

Some Canglongs, particularly those who excelled in intelligence, were invited to join certain institutes of the Mountain and Sea Realm prior to completing the "Thunder Strike Ceremony."

In reality, "Thunder Strike Ceremony" is Kuilong's terminology.

In the broader perception of the Mountain and Sea People, it's a "coming-of-age ritual" exclusive to the Canglongs.

Every Canglong about to enter maturity channels a large amount of electric current through its horns into every vesicle within its body.

Then, following a series of physical and chemical actions within the vesicles, the Canglongs officially acquire the ability to fly.

One could say, to judge whether a Canglong has matured.

Aside from observing its physique, the ability to fly becomes the most crucial standard.

Unfortunately, the giant Canglong captured by Kuilong cannot enjoy the treatment afforded to juvenile Canglongs.

Contrasting the almost familial treatment of young Canglongs.

The Mountain and Sea Civilization's attitude toward the giant Canglong is that of a real prisoner.

As long as they didn't directly kill or dissect the giant Canglong, Mountain and Sea People employed nearly every possible method on it.

From the mysteries of its physical structure to the uniqueness of its mind and soul...

The cruel and ruthless side of Mountain and Sea People was vividly depicted on the giant Canglong.

Even though the giant Canglong said nothing, the Mountain and Sea People successfully extracted all the intelligence they desired from its memory.

Among these, it naturally included the Ghost Dragon lurking behind the Azure Dragon Race.

Thus, Mountain and Sea People learned that the giant Canglong captured by Kuilong was actually a reincarnator?

Moreover, it was the incarnation of a god not yet exalted upon the divine throne?

The vast memories traceable to before the birth of the Goddess of Death were surprisingly stored without reservation in the giant Canglong's brain.

This significantly aids Mountain and Sea People in studying ancient history and mythology.

Some astute Mountain and Sea People even gleaned the secret of immortality beyond reincarnation from the giant Canglong's memory.

Ecstasy, shock, even fear...

All individuals involved in this study realized they had inadvertently stumbled upon the true "divine secrets."
