

The Growth 462

Chapter 462 - 10: The Three Angel Wars

The Mithra Civilization is a typical technological civilization.

Since the Goddess of Harvest stepped back, letting the War God and God of Wisdom lead the development of the entire civilization.

The Mithra Civilization embarked on a phase of rapid development, with various high-tech products emerging one after another, greatly satisfying the material needs of this civilization.

Especially after the seven Great Civilization Main Gods returned, the rapidly developing Mithra Civilization broke through the limits of surface civilization and began to seek exploration in high altitudes and even beyond the world.

Given a few hundred years more, the Mithra Civilization would undoubtedly enter the realm of All Heavens civilization.

By then, more Civilization Main Gods would be born, and the Mithra Divine Pantheon would formally step into the threshold of a medium-sized pantheon.

Like most technological civilizations, the Mithra Civilization does not idolize those extremely powerful individuals.

On the contrary, most of the time, the Mithra Civilization emphasizes the importance of collaboration.

Especially when the Void Exploration Project was established, and the Mithra Civilization broke through the world barriers that typical Ascenders could not surpass, they realized a truth.

That is, as long as world order and rules exist, technology will forever be the primary productive force.

Regrettably, the Mithra Civilization at this time faced an invasion from the Yawei World.

Confronted with the Holy Spirit that illuminated the entire world like the sun...

Confronted with the endless Angel Army that even the Gods were powerless against...

The Mithra Civilization immediately changed its research direction, quickly transforming the mechas originally used for exploring the void into Godslaying Mechs capable of slaying gods.

The first "War of the Angels" broke out immediately afterward.

In this war, besides the Gods, the Godslaying Mechs were the brightest stars.

With the assistance of Godslaying Mechs, the Gods who were barely holding the upper hand could slaughter those Middle-Rank Angels, and even Upper Rank Angels.

When the first Wise Angel fell at the hands of the "God of Guns and Cannons," the angel army retreated.

The Mithra Civilization thus gained a brief respite and collected the remnants of angels, manufacturing more and even stronger Godslaying Mechs.

Unfortunately, this ceasefire did not last long.

During the second "War of the Angels," the returned angel army revealed their true leaders—Hands of God.

Every Hands of God from the Yawei World is a Main God Level existence, resurrected high ranking Gods from other worlds during the invasion.

When these Hands of God appeared on the battlefield, the gods of Mithra had no choice but to confront them.

However, the Mithra Divine Pantheon only had seven Main Gods.

But the Hands of God numbered in the dozens, even after a large number of angels defected.

And the seven Great Creation Angels at the apex of the Hands of God were infinitely close to the Supreme God.

Before becoming the seven Great Creation Angels, they were supreme Divine Kings in their respective worlds, ruling over a realm.

The only saving grace was that after the original Holy Spirit perished, several of the seven Great Creation Angels began defecting, with only four truly participating in the war.

Under the leadership of the four Great Creation Angels, the Hands of God nearly annihilated the Mithra Divine Pantheon.

Fortunately, at the last minute, the Supreme Death God intervened, evoking the world's rules and recreating the Creator's power to forcibly repel those four Creation Angels by thwarting the threat from the life dimension.

Though after that, the Death God of the Mithra World was so severely injured that he could no longer act.

Yet, unwilling to risk it, the Hands of God chose to avoid battle, never again personally appearing in the Mithra World.

Subsequently, the third "War of the Angels" naturally became a tug-of-war.

Every moment, angel armies flood into the Mithra World...

Every moment, Godslaying Mechs charge recklessly towards the angel army...

But everyone knows, the true determinant of the battlefield's direction is the match between the Hands of God and the Mithra Main Gods.

The Death God of the Mithra World holds a "Dimensional Strike" akin to nuclear deterrence.

As long as it's uncertain whether the opponent can strike again, the Yawei World's gods cannot risk descending into this world.

Similarly, the Mithra Gods are aware of "Dimensional Strike's" harm.

If a world undergoes too many Dimensional Strikes, it's a tremendous destruction to the world itself.

Coupled with the Supreme Death God's current state, no one dares to gamble whether the Hands of God, when pushed, would risk falling to descend again into the Mithra World.

Therefore, under such mutual trepidation, the third "War of the Angels" has persisted until today.

With the resource-rich Yawei World backing them, angels die, reappear, and then invade again repeatedly.

Among them, the low rank angels are most unafraid of being consumed and dying.

After all, in Yawei civilization's concept, low rank Lower Rank Angels are disposable consumables.

Bodily death, soul annihilation, or obliteration aren't fatal injuries for the Lower Rank Angels.

As long as their backup is saved in the Holy Water Pool, Lower Rank Angels can resurrect continuously, only at most losing their memory from the previous battle.

Even the relatively "precious" Middle-Rank Angels, Yawei World actually doesn't care about their deaths.

Because Middle-Rank Angels were originally Gods, the death of their incarnations doesn't affect their powers, merely consuming a bit more holy water.

The holy water seen as extremely precious in the eyes of outsiders, and even ordinary angels.

In the eyes of higher-ranking Yawei gods, it's just an aggregation of energy and material.

In the eyes of truly powerful gods, only knowledge and those unreplicable divine artifacts are the most treasured things in All Heavens and Myriad Realms.

Thus, no matter how the Mithra Civilization uses the angel remnants to produce more Godslaying Mechs, it still inevitably enters a phase of decline.

To this day, hunger and poverty are spreading in this once prosperous world.

Now, intelligent beings living in the Mithra World endure hunger and disease daily, praying for this endless war to end soon.

Moreover, they must constantly endure the occasional falling artillery and attacks from the sky.

As the war continued to this point, barely any intact buildings remained on the surface of the Mithra World.

Crumbling ruins are now the mainstream of this world.

Individuals in the Mithra Civilization have moved their residences to the Underworld.

Only through public communication channels can the intelligent beings still tenaciously surviving in this world contact similar beings from other settlements.
