

The Substitute Bride Triplets And The Impotent Billionaire

You Can't Break My Heart

Chapter 60 You Can't Break My Heart

At an expensive private restaurant sat Jarek, Tinsley, the Triplet's, and Hart's family. Even though the food was served, except for the happy Triplet's, everyone was staring at each other awkwardly.

After a few seconds of an awkward clearing of the throat, shying away from each other's gaze, Rylee nudged her dad as if she was prompting him to talk.

"How have you been doing?" Mr. Hart asked while looking away from Jarek's gaze.

Jarek sneered at him before he leaned back on his chair. "After a decade and more, Mr. Hart finally asked the question." He replied, which made Mr. Hart embarrassed to the core.

"I..."

"Is it still work that holds you, or you were burrowing yourself in some woman except for mom's embrace?" He spat out without regard for Mr. Hart's face.

"Excuse me," Tinsley said and picked up the Triplet's to another private room upon seeing that the Hart needed their family time.

She was lost in thought while the little kids ate. She never expected that Jarek of all people had some family problems while growing up. It's no wonder that he didn't have Hart to his name and didn't mingle with them in public.

"Brother Jarek," Rylee called anxiously but Mrs. Hart held her hand in order to calm her down as Jarek and Mr Hart were still locked in each other's conversation.

"Where were you when mom left? Where were you when mom was sick? Where were you when I was leaving for abroad? Do you think it's all about the money?" He yelled at Mr. Hart with raw feelings overwhelming him.

"I'll tell you now." Jarek heaved while pointing at Mr. Hart. "Don't ever get near my family. Don't ever appear near me either, I don't have you as a..."

"Jarek," Tinsley rushed in when she heard his words. No matter what Mr. Hart may have done, she never expected him to say such things because she could guess that Mr. Hart was there to apologize for his past, or else he wouldn't have come.

"It's okay," she said while hugging him and patting his back.

Tinsley had noticed Jarek's haywire mood and after a little thinking, she had the intuition to return to the private room. Unfortunately, she met him when he was about to disown his father!

After a few minutes, Jarek immediately stood up and strode out of the private room, and left immediately.

Tinsley stood up to follow him, but she had just taken a single step when Mr. Hart called her back with a trembling voice.

Tinsley clenched her fist not knowing whether to go back or not, but after a few thoughts, she sighed and returned to sit with them.

After all, the Hart family tried to make the family one, unlike the William family, who are totally useless.

William's family, she doesn't even want to imagine what will be happening now that they know that she had children with Jarek.

"How's Jarek doing?" Mr. Hart asked Tinsley with a sad expression after she sat down. "I owe him and his mother a lot; it's a wonder if he'll forgive me." He started with a sad expression.

"That child had a bad past," Mr. Hart suddenly held Tinsley's hand with an imploring gaze. "Can you help me take care of him and your children even when he doesn't have us? Please don't let the Triplet's have a bad childhood like yours and his..."

Before Mr. Hart could complete his words, Jarek kicked the door open with anger. "Do you want me to bridal-carry you out?" He asked Tinsley with a calm expression.

He had noticed that she wasn't following him which made him return only to see her sitting with the Hart family.

Without letting her say a word, he strode toward her, held her hand, and began to take her outside.

Seeing that she was about to leave the room, Tinsley turned back and nodded to Mr. Hart.

Mr. Hart sighed in relief.

"Jarek, wait. You're hurting me." Tinsley finally cried out in pretense which made him come to a stop and release her finger.

He was shocked when she ran into his embrace and wrapped her hand around him.

"Tinsley." Jarek suddenly called with a rare seriousness that surprised her, but she still replied. "Hm?"

"If you want to leave now, you can. I won't force you to stay either." Jarek suddenly said, which shocked her to the core.

"Jarek?" She parted from him while looking at him with shock.

"I already understand that you can't own what doesn't belong to you, but I've used my scheming to hold you up. I understand that you may be annoyed by that. You can ask for any sort of compensation and I'll pay you. Even when you leave, you can also see the kids. Thank you for the warmth these days." Jarek said and turned to leave. "As for the kids, don't worry, I'll have a sufficient explanation that won't make them hate any of us." He finalized and turned to leave, leaving her in shock.

Tinsley couldn't believe all that happened in just a few minutes. She had always wanted him to let her go but now that it happened, she couldn't grasp it. Besides, the most important thing was that she couldn't let him go.

"Hubby." Tinsley unconsciously called, which made him stop in his tracks.

"You can't break my heart." She told him seriously and ran into his embrace.
