

Toxic Family Out- Reborn in CEO's Pamper Novel

When Names Become Stories By Naomi Ellis 28 Summary In Chapter 28 of "When Names Become Stories" by Naomi Ellis, Daphine confronts Yasmin regarding the damage done to an expensive dress. Frustrated by Yasmin's excuses, Daphine calls for her colleague Phoebe, who arrives with a young boy named Benny. The atmosphere is tense as Yasmin expresses her anger and desperation, claiming that the damage was caused by the boutique's staff. Phoebe, however, remains composed and informs Yasmin that she will need to pay for the damages, which amount to two million.

Yasmin is taken aback by Phoebe's assertiveness and the potential legal consequences she faces if she doesn't comply. As the confrontation escalates, Yasmin attempts to turn the situation in her favor by threatening to expose the boutique's alleged unethical practices. She records the interaction on her phone, feeling a surge of confidence as she contemplates using social media to tarnish Daphine's reputation. However, despite her bravado, no one from the boutique stops her as she leaves, leading her to believe that she can successfully manipulate the situation to her advantage.

Inside, Daphine remains calm and collected, impressing Phoebe with her maturity and foresight. Meanwhile, after leaving the boutique, Yasmin grapples with her emotions and the reality of her predicament. She calls her friend Freya, who is unaware of the recent events, and shares her distress about the situation. Freya's anger flares as she learns of Yasmin's troubles, urging her to take action against the boutique. Yasmin hesitates but ultimately decides to send the edited recording to Freya, who vows to help ruin Daphine's reputation in retaliation.

This decision marks a turning point for Yasmin, as she steels herself to confront the consequences of her actions. The chapter encapsulates a clash of emotions, from frustration and desperation to anger and determination. Daphine's unwavering composure contrasts sharply with Yasmin's vulnerability, highlighting the complexities of their encounter. As Yasmin prepares to unleash her revenge, the story delves into themes of power dynamics, the impact of social media, and the lengths individuals will go to protect their interests.

Continue Regular Chapter Reading Below **When Names Become Stories** **By Naomi Ellis** **Chapter 28: The Recording** "Then, you should have your manager deal with this!" Daphine felt a wave of frustration wash over her as she realized there was no point in continuing the conversation with Yasmin. With a composed demeanor, she reached for the front desk phone and pressed the button. "Phoebe, could you come down here for a moment?" As the clock ticked closer to closing time, Phoebe descended from the studio above, accompanied by Benny.

The young boy, his eyes wide with curiosity, clutched a lollipop in his hand, and quietly settled himself on the couch in the waiting area, his gaze darting around the boutique. Daphne exchanged a knowing glance with Phoebe, and in that instant, Phoebe understood the gravity of the situation. "Are you here to return the dress?" she inquired, her tone steady. "This dress is already ruined! How do you expect me to return it?" Yasmin's voice was a mix of anger and desperation, her frustration palpable.

If they hadn't been privy to the true nature of her actions, they might have fallen for her little performance. Phoebe took the dress from Yasmin's hands and hung it on the clothing rack with a practiced ease. "The slit has been altered, and the stitching is passable. However, the tassels are askew, and the embroidery thread is misaligned. You will need to compensate for the full price of the damage. Ms. Culver, this dress costs two million.

"Will you be paying by card or bank transfer?" As she finished speaking, Phoebe lifted her phone and snapped several photos of the dress, documenting the evidence meticulously. Yasmin stood there, momentarily speechless. She hadn't anticipated Phoebe's directness or her unwillingness to entertain any excuses. Suppressing her unease, Yasmin attempted to sound composed. "It was your staff who damaged it while checking it! Why should I be held responsible for that?" But Phoebe remained unyielding, her expression resolute. She didn't even suggest that Daphne apologize.

"If you refuse to pay, then you can expect a letter from our lawyer," Phoebe stated matter-of-factly. A wave of guilt washed over Yasmin. The realization that her scheme to frame them had backfired left her feeling vulnerable. She couldn't afford to risk a lawsuit, especially not with two million at stake. Where would she even find that kind of money? Then, the recording in her hand sparked a flicker of confidence within her. "So this is how your boutique operates. You charge exorbitant prices for a single dress?

You claim it's a rental just so your staff can intentionally damage it and then blackmail customers, right?" With each word, Yasmin felt her courage swell. "I'll post this online and expose the truth about what kind of boutique this really is!" She raised her phone, the recording app still running, a smirk forming on her lips. Deep down, she didn't believe they would actually allow her to go through with it. In today's world of social media, how could they withstand the backlash? She turned on her heel and headed toward the door, deliberately slowing her pace, hoping they would call her back.

This was her chance to turn the tables. But she was mistaken. No one stopped her, not even when she stepped outside into the cool evening air. Fine, she thought defiantly. This was the era of social media. Even if there was no official response, the online community could easily tarnish their reputation. Soon enough, they would be begging her for forgiveness, and the name DaphMuse would be tarnished beyond repair. Inside the boutique, Phoebe cast a worried glance at Daphne. Yet, Daphne remained remarkably composed, as if she had anticipated every possible outcome.

Phoebe began to realize that her concern was unwarranted. "Daphie, you've really matured," she said, admiration lacing her words. Daphne smiled warmly and reached into her bag, pulling out a set of keys. "I've rented an apartment for you downtown. It's conveniently located near both the hospital and the boutique, making it easier for you to care for Benny." She handed the keys to Phoebe, her gesture thoughtful. "I've only covered six months of rent.

After that, you'll need to manage the payments yourself." Daphne had a knack for anticipating others' needs, making it easy for them to accept her help without feeling indebted. Initially hesitant, Phoebe's uncertainty melted away as she took the keys from Daphne's hand. "Then... just deduct the six months' rent from my salary," she suggested, her voice steady. "Of course," Daphne replied, moving over to Benny to engage him in playful banter for a while. Meanwhile, outside the boutique, Yasmin sat in her car, lost in a whirlwind of thoughts.

After a long moment of contemplation, she finally picked up her phone and dialed Freya's number. "Freya..." The moment she uttered her friend's name, tears began to stream down her cheeks. "Can you lend me some money?" Freya had been grounded for over ten days, completely disconnected from the outside world, unaware of the chaos that had unfolded during Yasmin's birthday dinner. "What's wrong, Yasmin?" Freya's voice was filled with concern. Yasmin recounted the entire ordeal, her voice trembling with emotion. On the other end of the line, Freya's anger flared. "What? That's outrageous!

How can they do that to you? Yasmin, you're far too kind. Why would you even consider paying them? This has nothing to do with you. That woman definitely did it on purpose because she knew you were an easy target." "I did record it, but do you think it'll actually help?" Yasmin asked, her voice barely a whisper. "Send it to me immediately! The last time that woman posted my video online, it caused us so much trouble. This time, I'll ensure she feels the consequences of her actions.

I'll ruin her reputation so badly that she won't find work again." "Wouldn't that be going too far?" Yasmin hesitated, doubt creeping into her mind. "We're simply doing what's right. DaphMuse employs underhanded tactics to profit. They deserve to be exposed for their deceit." After the call ended, Yasmin swiftly sent the edited recording to Freya, her heart racing. She had carefully cut the conversation down to the crucial parts, even going so far as to have someone alter her voice so it wouldn't be recognizable.

With a renewed sense of purpose, she took a deep breath, ready to face whatever came next. Conclusion In the aftermath of the confrontation, Daphine's poised demeanor not only shielded her from Yasmin's attempts to manipulate the situation but also highlighted her growth as a leader. By taking decisive action and providing support to Phoebe, she demonstrated an unwavering commitment to both her business and her team. The keys to the new apartment symbolized not just a practical solution to Phoebe's challenges, but also a deeper connection forged through trust and understanding.

Daphine's ability to anticipate the needs of those around her became a testament to her evolution, as she embraced the role of a mentor rather than merely a manager. This moment marked a turning point for both women, suggesting that the strength of their bond would only deepen as they navigated the complexities of their professional and personal lives. Meanwhile, Yasmin's emotional turmoil revealed the fragility of her facade. In her desperate bid to reclaim control, she found herself entangled in a web of her own making, grappling with the consequences of her actions.

The call to Freya ignited a flicker of defiance within her, yet it also exposed the vulnerability that lay beneath her bravado. As she sent the recording, a mix of apprehension and resolve coursed through her veins, signaling a shift from victimhood to agency. The path ahead remained uncertain, but Yasmin's decision to fight back suggested an awakening-a recognition that names, once mere identifiers, could indeed transform into powerful stories of resilience and retribution.

Will Yasmin's revenge plot gain traction, or will Daphne and Phoebe find a way to counteract the impending backlash? The intricate web of relationships and motivations will be explored, revealing how far each character is willing to go to protect their reputation and livelihood. Moreover, Daphne's unexpected gesture of support for Phoebe adds another layer of complexity to the narrative. As Phoebe settles into her new apartment, the dynamics of their friendship will be tested against the backdrop of mounting external pressures.

Will this new arrangement foster a deeper bond, or will the looming threat from Yasmin overshadow their personal growth? Expect emotional confrontations, strategic maneuvering, and perhaps a few surprises as the characters navigate the murky waters of loyalty, betrayal, and the quest for justice in a world where reputations can be shattered in an instant. Sara Lili Sara Lili is a daring romance writer who turns icy landscapes into scenes of fiery passion. She loves crafting hot love stories while embracing the chill of Iceland's breathtaking cold.