

181 LISA'S FAILED MISSION

Lisa waited angrily as she tapped her feet on the floor. 1

She had been waiting for Alpha Xaden for almost the past one hour and yet he had not allowed in.

This was frustrating.

One of the guards that she usually slept with for extra offers whistled at her, and she glared at him and ignored him.

He motioned to his co guard to wait for him and then he walked up to her.

He grabbed her arm. "What has got you all upset? Usually, when I call you, you come Running like a hungry bitch."

"Get your filthy hands off me!" She jerked free from his firm grasp.

He looked at her in amazement and looked at his friend to see if he had seen it, too.

"Seems Lisa the slut has now gotten a mouth." He laughed.

His friend laughed, too.

Lisa rolled her eyes and looked the other way.

The guard caught her shoulder.

"Hey, I am talking to you!" He snapped at her.

"Let go of me, you freak." She growled.

The guard let her go, and she had to take in breaths to calm down.

"Don't ever touch me again!" She warned him.

"By the time I walk out of that door, I will be a new woman, and you will be begging me for a favor."

He looked at her. "What has gone into your head."

She growled at him, her wolf teeth sprouting.

"Crazy bitch! You will back begging me." He warned.

She snapped at him, and then they both left.

The guards who were standing watch at the door were just looking at them.

"What?!" She hissed angrily.

How much she regretted sleeping with that idiot.

But then, she had had no other alternative.

Once she told Alpha Xaden what she knew then she would be off the hook.

She was so excited.

Just what was taking him this long?

After about ten more minutes of standing, the door opened, and then some Betas came out of the room.

"You can go in now." The guard said.

She hurriedly heeded and went into his large office.

It was where he spoke to some of his wolves and went through scrolls.

It was also different from the court room.

She saw him writing down some things on a scroll.

She smiled.

How she could not wait to have him all to herself!

"My lord." She curtsayed.

He went on writing without acknowledging her.

She just stood.

Was he not going to say anything to her?

She stood there for about two minutes as he scribbled, and then he stopped and looked at her.

"You won't say what you came to do?" He asked.

"Oh...I had just assumed, perhaps." She started to stutter her words together.

Xaden sighed heavily.

He set down the quill aside. "I am listening. What do you want to say to me that is of high importance?"

Why was she feeling so foolish all of a sudden now?

She started to feel uncomfortable, and then she cleared her throat.

"My lord, last night I was sleeping, and I overheard a conversation between-

"You overheard?" Xaden raised a brow suspiciously. "Were you gossiping....what's your name again."

"Lisa, my lord." She said through gritted teeth.

"Lisa." He nodded. "You were gossiping, were you not?"

"No... actually, I happened to be asleep simply, and then I was awakened, and I-

"You were gossiping." He said, waving his hand away, indicating that she had left. "I do not listen to such trivial matters about women. It is a waste of my time."

"But my lord." She gasped, unable to believe he was simply kicking her out and not hearing what she had to say.

"I have a lot of work, as you can see," he said, dismissing her without even looking at her. "So you can see yourself out. Or perhaps the guards will help you."

He snapped his fingers, and she turned and watched the guards approach her.

They took a hold of her arm.

"My lord, it is about Jasmine." She said.

That caught his attention and stopped him short.

He stopped using the feather quill and looked up at her.

He motioned at the guards to let her go, and then they did.

She jerked her hand free and glared at them.

He looked at her intensely as if now taking note of her for the first time since he had ever seen her.

It was crazy what Jasmine did to him.

Just the mere mention of Jasmine did to him.

But, well, what she was about to reveal was unforgivable.

Once he found out, he would send Jasmine out of the pack and murder her because she had fooled him, and she would be upgraded to a mistress.

She smiled as she imagined it all.

"What did you want to tell me about Jasmine?"
He asked her. "And you better not waste my time."

She nodded. "Last night, my lord, I was asleep when I overheard Jasmine and Fiona speaking to each other. They were talking about-

There were some men shouting outside.

Lisa frowned.

Then it stopped.

She resumed what she was saying. "Jasmine said that she was not the-

There were more shoutings now, and the men were racing outside.

Xaden got up on his feet.

The guards turned and went to the door.

Lisa was blowing in fury what was happening
now?! 1

Then Xaden went around from his desk and went to the door.

Lisa followed him behind.

The men were running, and she finally saw it when they hit the balcony.

181 LISA'S FAILED MISSION

It was none other than Aurora in her wolf form tearing the men and women apart.

The other wolves had transformed and were equally trying to fight her off, but it was as if she was more substantial.

"What the hell is going on?" Xaden demanded.

"We don't know. She just started attacking." Another of his men who had just arrived to report to him said.
