

Chapter 133

"Amy, f*cking happened! That's what! She did a number on your mate. If she isn't in hiding when we get back, I'm going to rip her head off myself. That b*tch has caused more problems since Kennedy showed up than Claude since we took his pack." 1

"We can't just kill people for being mean."

"I WILL TEAR HER APART! The minute we find Kennedy, Amy is a dead woman."

I don't get another rational thought out as we race into the house, past several people in the ballroom seeking comfort and shelter during the attack. I follow Bennet up to Kennedy's room and he knocks her door completely off its hinges.

He shifts and starts wildly searching her room, screaming her name. I follow suit. She isn't here, but her scent is everywhere. She was here recently, but it's not like the last time we couldn't find her when she purposely made the trail difficult to track. I follow the sweet notes of honey and spice as they get stronger the closer I get to the patio door. I slide it open, cracking the glass with my efforts. Footprints! There are footprints in the snow here leading to the..."NO!"

I shout before leaping over the side of the railing. We are only one floor above the main, but I have no idea if she can make this landing or not. I don't know if she took off or if she was taken. I don't know what Amy said, but based on Bennet's reaction, it wasn't something simply b*tchy. 4

Bennet lands behind me. "Can you tell if she was taken or was forced to leave?"

"I only smell her and there's only one set of footprints, but who knows.

"The attack on the teens could have been a distraction and her forcing you to leave gave someone an opportunity.. Would she leave on her own?"

"I don't know. I mean she knows every way in and out of this packhouse without being detected. It was one of her more irritating games. Like f*cking hide and seek on steroids. She really could have tested the boundaries if she wanted too, but she didn't. She toed the line. Followed orders just enough that no one could complain. But it was still a major pain in the ass!"

"What did Amy say that would make her want to leave now? You said this isn't the first time and Robin mentioned Amy giving her a hard time, but that Kennedy handled it like a pro."

"I think it was the combined circumstance of Amy being in your office, taunting her, then after you left." He shakes his head and then gives me details of what went down in my office after I ran out. At least Kennedy is fighting for herself and her position now, but the way she looked at Bennet when she commanded him. He knew she was going to do something bad and he has been powerless to stop it."

My senses are on high alert with this information. She is depressed and it's my fault. She thinks she's not worthy enough and that I feel the same. Like an old wolf she came out to the forest to be taken back to the Moon Goddess. I have to find her before that happens. It feels like we have been walking for hours when it's only been about thirty minutes. But for Kennedy, that time is crucial. It's too cold for her to be out here without any extra layers and I'm sure she didn't even consider that.

"There!" My wolf cries out and I see her slumped on the ground.

We race to her and I scoop her up. Her lips are blue and she's barely breathing, but there is still life in her. I lay her head on my shoulder and press her torso against my naked chest, trying to give her as much of my body heat as possible to her vital organs. I hold her as tight to me as I can while summoning the pack doctor, Greta, Robin and anyone else I can think of that could be useful. Now it's a race against the clock. I have to get her home and warm. ❄️
