Chapter 106 Luo Yanqing... Hello

The man was dressed in a simple white shirt and black trousers, standing at about 185 cm tall. From her angle, he was slightly turned away from her, but his facial contours were exceptionally clear and fair under the morning sun.

He stood tall and straight, seemingly unaware of her and the three little ones, with deep eyes that seemed fathomless, focusing only on the man he was conversing with.

It wasn't until he sensed her gaze that he slowly turned his face toward her.

At the same time, the man speaking with him also directed his eyes at her.

Kang Li and the three kids approached and before she could speak, the man in conversation with Luo Yanqing greeted her first, "You must be sister-in-law, right? My surname is Wen, given name Siyuan, and I live right next door."

Pointing at the entrance to his own courtyard, Wen Siyuan introduced himself to Kang Li.

With a slight nod, Kang Li said, "Hello."

So, he's the male protagonist!

Handsome and refined, gentle as jade, he looked like a decent fellow, so why did he harbor such gender bias?

Wen Siyuan pushed up his black-framed glasses on the bridge of his nose and spoke softly to Luo Yanqing, "Sister-in-law and the kids must have a lot to say to you. I won't disturb you further; we can chat another time."

Upon hearing this, Luo Yanqing gave a low "Mm" in response.

After Wen Siyuan left, Kang Li looked straight at the man standing a couple of steps away from her, "Luo Yanqing... hello." A faint smile appeared on her stunning face.

Meeting her gaze, Luo Yanqing remained silent for a moment, then tugged at the corner of his mouth, murmuring, "Hello."

Kang Li noticed that the man's eyes had momentarily faltered upon seeing her—brief enough to easily ignore, but she saw it clearly, his emotions at least seemed to fluctuate in her presence.

His appearance was even more outstanding than what she had seen in photos. If there had been the slightest hint of a smile around his eyes and eyebrows, his striking features would have been even more vivid.

However, his face showed not the slightest trace of a smile, nor did his eyes hold any mirth. He was as if someone who had never smiled before.

Luo Yanqing reached out and took the vegetable basket from Kang Li's hand into his own, but her gaze remained fixed on the space between his brows. She watched him quietly, feeling his gaze was indifferent, so much so that it permeated through his every move...

But within that indifference, there was a deep serenity.

Taking the key to the courtyard gate from the small bag around her wrist, Kang Li unlocked the door. Her crisp, fox-like eyes looked back at the man, "Come in."

Luo Yanqing didn't say anything. Holding the basket, he took his long legs and stepped into the courtyard.

But the three little ones still stood in place.

Ruirui was expressionless while the twins looked more aggrieved than the other.

"Mommy, why is daddy ignoring Vivi?"

"Mommy, daddy is ignoring Hanhan too!"

Their complains were evident in their whiny voices.

Kang Li beckoned the three to come into the yard, and only after closing the door did she speak, "Did you greet your dad?" The twins shook their heads.

"What about you, Ruirui?"

Her eyes focused on Xiao Ming Rui.

Lips pressed tightly, it took a while for Xiao Ming Rui to reply, "No."

Kang Li asked, "Tell me, why didn't you greet your dad? Why didn't you try talking to him first?"

Xiao Ming Wei pursed her lips, "But daddy didn't even look at us."

At the moment, Luo Yanqing was walking to the center of the courtyard. Hearing the conversation between Kang Li and the little ones, he paused slightly, his calm and restrained gaze surveying the yard for a moment, before continuing on.

He neither turned back to comfort Xiao Ming Rui and his siblings, nor did he comment on any changes in the courtyard to Kang Li.
