

Widow 541

Chapter 541

It rained all the way until night fell.

The signal in the village was not good, and it would take half a day to browse the web. Crystal completely lost interest in the mobile phone, so she found a piece of chess and wanted to play chess with Harold.

The house of the Hays family was not big, and the kitchen was next to the dining room, followed by Dan's room. She had not slept with Mia in the same bed in the early years, so Mia and Debbie slept in the same room. Next to them was Kyle's room, and the last room, where there was a small pile of things, was Crystal's.

As soon as Crystal left, there were a lot of things piled up in this place. Dan packed up all the things, revealing the original appearance of this small room.

The ground in the mud hut was bumpy, and in the corner, there was a small bed of about 1.5 meters. The bedding had been laid out, which was made of ordinary coarse floral fabric. Next to the bed was a broken table, which was probably abandoned, repaired, and barely used. There were also some books on the table.

In addition, there was a box with a few pieces of clothes in it, which all belonged to Crystal in the past 19 years.

Harold was tall. As soon as he came in, he blocked more than half of the light, making the small room look extremely small.

Harold was quite confident in his own chess skills. He said, "Okay."

Crystal played the first piece of chess, and Harold followed closely behind.

After the fourth chess piece was placed, Crystal said, "Why don't you stop me? I'm going to win." Harold was confused.

Why didn't he see how Crystal was going to win?

Crystal pursed her lips with a proud look on her face. "I've already warned you. Don't blame me." She put down the fifth piece and put her palms together. "I won!"

Harold was confused.

"How did you win?"

Crystal gestured with her hands and said, "Can't you see? Here, there are five pieces! You still said that you know how to play chess. You lost so quickly and didn't even know how you lost." Harold was speechless

She took out a mirror from her bag with great enthusiasm and showed it to Harold. "Look at my drawing skills. Isn't it good?"

In the mirror, the man's eyes were cold, but he had three thick cat whiskers on his face. There was a piece of black drawing on his nose, which looked a little cute.

Crystal sighed. "But you don't look like a cat. You look fiercer than CoCo."

Speaking of CoCo, she thought of Danny. She didn't know that Danny was planning to kill her in the hundreds of ways.

She wanted to forget it and be happy. She would think about it when she got back to City W. If nothing worked, she would kneel down and apologize to Danny and say that CoCo was a puppy a hundred times.

Out of the blue, Crystal straightened up slightly, kissed him on the corner of his eyes, and said, "Everything is written in your eyes."

Harold's eyelashes fluttered as he brushed past Crystal's soft lips. Crystal felt a little itchy and said with a smile, "Alright, let go of me. The bed is going to be dirty if you keep doing this."

What she meant was that both of their faces and hands were black, and they might dirty the sheet. But Harold interpreted her words differently.

"Dirty?" Harold laughed in a muffled voice. He rubbed Crystal's full earlobe with his fingers and said, "I'll be careful. It won't get dirty."

"?" Crystal said, "No matter how careful you are, it will still be dirty..

When she said this, she suddenly realized something, as if she had been stabbed. She stood up immediately, and her face was so red that it seemed that she was going to burn in the next second. "You are a hooligan!"

Harold raised his eyebrows slightly and said, "Why are you saying that I'm a hooligan? Crystal, you're the one who talked about it first."

Harold took a step away from her, but he didn't let her go. Instead, he said, "Did he beat you before?" "No." Crystal looked nervously at Dan's room, afraid that he would suddenly push the door open and come out. "But if he sees it, he will."

Harold tutted and finally let go of Crystal. He rubbed her tender neck and said, "Go to sleep.

"Okay." Crystal hurriedly nodded, Afraid that Harold would go back on his word, she turned around and slipped into her room. She even locked the door.

Harold, "..."

He tidied up his collar slightly and walked down the steps in the bright moonlight. The moon was hanging high in the air, dragging his shadow very long. There were occasional bird cries.

Luke walked out of the darkness and said, "I've received news today."

"Hmm," Harold replied.

Luke said, "As you expected, after you left City W, they didn't let go of this good opportunity. They have contacted several shareholders."

If Crystal was told that Harold would pry open the lock and enter her room in the middle of the night. just to sleep with her in his arms when she first met him, Crystal would definitely think that this person was talking nonsense and was Harold's enemy.

After all, Master White looked so cold and arrogant.

But now, Master White, who was cold and arrogant, forced his way onto her one-and-a-half-meter bed. It was okay for her to sleep alone, but with a tall man with long legs, it was too difficult. Crystal was held in Harold's arms. She took a deep breath and said, "... Don't you feel that it's too cramped sleeping like this?"

Harold, "No."

Crystal, "... But I think it's very cramped."

Harold simply rolled over with Crystal in his arms, put Crystal on his body, and said, "It's fine now."

Chapter 548

Because it was raining again, the road to the town was still slippery and hard to walk on. The body of the off-road vehicle was splashed with mud. Crystal lost her temper and leaned in Harold's arms, doubting her life.

Was she so delicate before?

It must be Harold's fault for being so kind to her, causing her to be so picky.

About an hour later, they finally arrived at the town. It was the day of the fair. Many people from the surrounding villages came. There were rows of stalls on both sides of the narrow road. People were selling vegetables, seeds, pesticides, clothes, and meat... There were shouts everywhere. When children encountered such occasions, they would be very excited. They would walk through the crowd in groups, not afraid of the big sun above their heads, and burst into laughter. Because the two sides of the road were too crowded, the car could not drive in at all. The off-road vehicle stopped on the side of the road. Harold got out of the car first, opened the umbrella in his hand, and let Crystal down.

Even if the quality of the umbrella was good, when Crystal left the car with the air conditioner on, she still felt a burst of hot air hitting her face, which made her white and tender cheeks instantly turn red.

Although Crystal grew up in Sunshine Village, she had never been to a big fair. She felt that it was very interesting. Harold felt that she was no different from the running children at this time. While Crystal was squatting on the ground playing with other people's chickens, Harold was standing behind her and holding the umbrella. The group of people was incompatible with this small town, and many people were secretly looking at them.

Crystal said, "Aunt Eva, don't you remember me? I'm Crystal."

Aunt Eva was stunned. "Crystal?"

She stood up, walked around Crystal in her slippers, and said, "Oh my god, I really didn't recognize you."

Crystal said, "Aunt Eva, I'm here to see Monique. How's she doing recently?"

Speaking of this, Aunt Eva's expression changed.

Confused, Crystal asked, "What's wrong?"
