

Chapter 846 Coming Back To See You

"Mom, Dad made it through." Cole typed, unable to hold back the relief in his words as he texted Sophie, still miles away in Delta.

When Sophie found out that Elliana had saved Jarrett's life, excitement rushed through her so quickly that she called Cole immediately.

Cole had just pressed the answer button when the emergency room doors suddenly opened, and Elliana stepped out, looking completely drained.

"Elliana, you really are the Evans family's guardian angel!" Ruben approached first, reaching out and gripping her hand with both of his.

After a brief pause, Diane walked over. "Elliana, thank you. We truly mean it."

"You don't need to thank me, Ruben, Diane. We're family, and saving Jarrett was something I should do." As Elliana spoke, she pulled down her mask and looked at the elderly couple, who could not stop crying from relief. "Although Jarrett's condition is stable for the moment, it remains very precarious. He has been drowning in grief for years, and he no longer wants to fight to recover. If his condition worsens again, I might not be able to save him a second time."

"Then what are we supposed to do?" Diane asked, her voice tight with raw concern.

Elliana said, "He needs emotional support. If we can lift his spirits, it will help him more than any medication."

Hearing that, worry returned to Diane's face. "Jarrett's greatest pain is not knowing what happened to Sophie. As long as she's missing, he will never truly be at peace. There's no way to avoid that truth."

Ruben let out a long, heavy sigh. Sophie had disappeared for so many years without leaving a single clue. To the Evans family, she felt more like someone who had already passed away, and they no longer dared to believe she could ever be found.

Because they knew the truth, Bertram and Emmanuel both turned their attention to Cole, silently waiting to see how he would respond.

Elliana shifted her gaze toward Cole and stayed silent as she waited for him to decide what to do next.

With the phone still pressed to his ear, Cole had never ended the call with Sophie. Aware of everyone watching him, he spoke calmly into the phone. "You heard everything just now, didn't you?"

On the other end of the line, Sophie was already crying hard. "I did. I heard all of it. I know I was wrong. I'll fly back to Ubento right now to see your father." She ended the call the moment she finished speaking.

A quiet breath left Cole as the tension finally eased from his body. Sophie had broken through the wall she had built around herself. She was finally coming back, and she was ready to face Jarrett, even with the scars she carried.

Moments later, the doors to the emergency room opened, and the medical staff carefully pushed Jarrett out on a hospital bed. Though he was awake, his strength was clearly gone, and he lay there looking painfully frail.

As Ruben and Diane hurried to his side, Jarrett managed a weak smile filled with self-blame. "I'm sorry. I made you worry."

Tears streamed down Ruben's and Diane's faces as they stood there in silence. They understood the suffering weighing on their son's heart, yet there was nothing they could do to carry that pain for him.

Moving closer to the bed, Cole lowered his voice and spoke gently. "Dad, I found Mom."

The words hit Jarrett so suddenly that his mind stalled. He stared at Cole in disbelief, waiting for him to repeat it.

Shock spread across Ruben's and Diane's faces as well. "Cole... what did you just say?" Diane asked.

Without hesitation, Cole said, "I said I found my mother. I really did. She's already on her way back to Ublento to see my dad, and you'll be seeing her very soon."

At these words, Jarrett, weak as he was, pushed himself upright. His voice trembled as he looked at Cole. "Cole... you really found her? You're not lying to me, are you?"

Cole reached out and gave Jarrett's hand a steady squeeze. "Dad, I didn't lie. Mom is coming back to see you."

The uncertainty in Jarrett's eyes slowly dissolved, replaced by a rush of emotion. "Cole, you have to tell me everything! How did you find her? Has she... been doing well all these years? How is she now?"

Unable to stay quiet, Ruben and Diane leaned in at the same time. "Cole, why did Sophie leave so suddenly back then?" Diane asked. "Where has she been hiding all these years?"

Questions piled up faster than answers could be given, and the hallway was far too crowded for explanations. Knowing this was not the right place, Cole asked the staff to move Jarrett to a private room first.

After Jarrett was settled and everyone else stepped out, Cole sat down and explained everything from start to finish, leaving nothing out.

The story left Ruben and Diane in complete shock. They had never imagined that Sophie had carried such a painful past, or that she had survived so many unbearable trials on her own. At least now, the truth was finally out in the open, and the years of uncertainty no longer haunted them.

Jarrett, however, felt no relief. His chest ached as self-reproach took hold of him. "It was all my fault. I couldn't cure her Psychophrenia. I couldn't help her through her illness, and that's why she left. She suffered all those years because of my incompetence."

Lowering his voice, Cole spoke carefully. "Dad, this isn't your burden to carry. Mom never stopped blaming herself for leaving without telling you the truth. She told me she wants to come clean about everything this time. If you don't shut her out, she wants to stay with you and make things right."

"That's good. That's really good!" Emotion washed over Jarrett, and his eyes filled as he nodded.

For many years, resentment had quietly taken root in Jarrett's heart, and he had aimed it at Sophie more than once. He blamed her for keeping her pain hidden, and he blamed her for vanishing without a single explanation, leaving him lost in grief and unanswered questions. Now that he knew she was ready to bare everything to him at last, a deep calm settled over him, easing emotions he had carried for far too long.
