My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 1541-Request More

Rosalie subconsciously looked at Byron beside her.

Byron nodded.

With his approval, Rosalie felt more relaxed and announced the preliminary results they had just discussed.

“In my opinion, in this cooperation, Lancer Corporation provided us with the medicinal materials and the subsequent sales channels. However, in terms of technology, it was the research institute that made the biggest contribution. It can be said that the research institute mastered the core technology of new drugs. Based on this and our previous cooperation experience with other companies, the research institute wants to take the majority of the profit distribution this time.”

Although Rosalie, who was in charge of the research institute, did not know much about this aspect, she expressed her stand confidently.

Byron listened as he looked at Rosalie, who spoke seriously. He subconsciously revealed his appreciation for her.

Xander could not believe his ears and said, “Sorry, I didn’t get what you said. Miss Jacobs, did you say...”

Rosalie repeated calmly. ‘The research institute will take 80% of the profit of the drug sales, and the remaining 20% will go to Lancer Corporation.’

Xander laughed in disbelief. “Miss Jacobs, you must be kidding. Lancer Corporation has risked so much this time, yet you’re only willing to give us that much profit?”

Rosalie sounded firmer as she continued. ‘The Larson family is a family majoring in the traditional medicine industry, so I’m sure you understand the rules in the pharmaceutical industry. In the process of pharmaceutical research and development, the core technology of research and development is the most important. To speak of efforts, our institute has spent much more effort than Lancer Corporation.’

Xander glanced at Byron beside Rosalie and understood why Rosalie decided this.

Apparently, that was the result of their discussion.

“Miss Jacobs, this isn’t funny. I was the one who suggested this research, and our company provided the medicinal materials you used for free. Now that your research institute has successfully researched the drug, you’re going against us and only plan to let us gain less than half the profit. If you insist on this division, Lancer Corporation will have to reconsider cooperating with your research institute.”

Xander looked displeased, and his tone was businesslike.

His reaction was what they expected.

Instead of insisting upon noticing his anger, Rosalie gave in. She spoke in a nicer tone, “Of course, the drugs were only successfully developed with your company’s cooperation, Young Master Larson. If you’re dissatisfied, I can increase the profit division on your side by 5%. Lancer Corporation can take 25%. That is already the most I can compromise.”

Xander sneered. “Miss Jacobs, you’re indeed generous by giving me an extra 5%. Do you really think I’ll agree?”

Rosalie answered indifferently, “I can’t do anything more if you’re dissatisfied with the profit division, Young Master Lancer. All I can do is pay three times the price of the medicinal materials Lancer Corporation has sponsored us during the research. As for the sales part, I can look for some other way to sell the drug.”

Rosalie meant they could stop the cooperation between the research institute and Lancer Corporation.

Xander laughed angrily as he said, “Lancer Corporation’s medicinal materials have always been priceless and only used for our company. Miss Jacobs, it is not as simple as you think.”

Rosalie’s forehead puckered. “Well, you can state a price you’re satisfied with, then, Young Master Xander. I’ll never bargain.”

She felt a little uneasy and uncertain about taking this matter to this extent.

Xander might go along with the flow and request more on the part of the profit.

“I don’t think you understand what’s happening, Young Master Xander.”

Byron spoke suddenly. At the same time, he leaned toward the direction of the two of them as he stared at Xander coldly.

My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 1542- Nothing To Talk About “Rosie’s part of this research is the technology. The medicinal materials given by Lancer Corporation were just for this batch. If you aren’t happy with the division of profit, it doesn’t matter. We can divide the profit for this batch of drugs produced using your materials by the percentage you’re satisfied with. However, the research institute also has the right to only sign the contract of this batch of drugs with you.”

Then, Byron continued slowly, ‘This means that after this batch of drugs is sold, Rosie can take the technology to seek cooperation with other suppliers of medicinal materials. What about Lancer Corporation? Where else can you find an institute that can make it?’

He was implying the status of the research institute was higher than Lancer Corporation in this project.

Rosalie did not need Lancer Corporation.

Instead, Lancer Corporation needed Rosalie to get the drug produced.

The party leading the project should be the research institute instead of Lancer Corporation from the beginning.

As for Xander, he could choose short-term interests or long-term benefits through this matter.

Xander did not expect Byron to threaten him like this. He glanced at Byron coldly but still chose to speak to Rosalie instead.

“Are you sure you want to cooperate with Lancer Corporation in such a business-like method, Miss Jacobs? Is Lancer Corporation so worthless that you can dump it after using it?”

Rosalie glanced at Byron. She felt secure with Byron’s confident nod. Thus, she chose to remain silent as an answer to Xander’s question.

Byron answered on Rosalie’s behalf naturally, ‘There are no friends in the business field. I’m sure you understand this more than Rosie does, don’t you? The division of profit is always the toughest part of a corporation.

Aren’t you also using the strategy of making use of your friendship with Rosie to get her to compromise?’

Xander was not as good as Byron at negotiating, and Byron's words made his face ashen.

After a moment of silence, he spoke word by word, "I can't accept the distribution of profit you're proposing!"

Byron said, "Maybe I can show you how Lawrence Corporation's profits were distributed with partners when we occupied technology stocks.

Seeing those figures, you might be satisfied with the share you can obtain now."

He was trying to tell Xander if he were to set the distribution, Xander would get a lesser percentage than this.

Xander's plastered friendliness shattered, and he glared at them gloomily.

"We can sign the contract now if you accept the terms. If you aren't satisfied, our research institute is also willing to invite professionals to evaluate the early investment of Lancer Corporation and pay compensation at ten times the price."

Rosalie pushed the contract to Xander.

Xander picked it up, tore it in half, and threw the papers back on the table without even looking at it.

Rosalie was startled upon seeing that.

Before this, Xander had been behaving very gentlemanly before her. He was the heir of a family with a high status in the world of traditional medicine. Rosalie always thought he would care about etiquette.

Unexpectedly, Xander acted so impulsively this time.

The atmosphere in the office suddenly became cold.

Xander said, "If I'm not mistaken, we agreed to share the patent equally when we first decided to cooperate on this project. I don't think we need to negotiate anymore since you're going back on your word."

Rosalie responded, "Young Master Xander, you also said you would give me medical books for reference. I was willing to share the patent equally with you because of that, but I didn't get any books. I produced the drug after solely researching it myself, so I don't think it's necessary for me to give you equal shares of the patent."

Xander could not say anything as what Rosalie said was also true.

After pondering for a while, he stood up from the sofa and said, "Since you've said so, we have nothing to discuss!"

Then, Xander left the office angrily.

The sound of the door slamming shocked Rosalie, leaving her dumbfounded.

"Did that scare you?" Byron got up and walked to her side.

Upon hearing his voice, Rosalie snapped out of her daze and lamented, "No. I'm just surprised. I did not expect Young Master Xander to act like that."

He admired her more and hugged her shoulder, embracing her in his arms.

Rosalie sighed. "Is everyone in the business field such a hypocrite?"

Byron stroked her back to appease her. "Would you be afraid if I were also like that?"

That left Rosalie recalling Byron's method of dealing with business silently.

After thinking for a while, she realized she had already known his style and accepted it.

She smiled carefreely. "I won't seem to be surprised if it were you."

Byron seemed slightly dissatisfied. "Am I such a person to you?"

Rosalie distanced herself from him and looked into his eyes. She explained, "When you were helping me analyze the situation, I just thought that it was so charming like this is who you are."

Without Byron's decisive decisions, Lawrence Corporation would not have strived and reached the position it was in today.

Far from being afraid, Rosalie was eager to learn from him.

Moreover, what Xander did shocked her because he showed his tyrannical side when he tore the contract.

She believed Byron would never do something like that.

Hearing the woman's praise from the bottom of her heart, he took her hand and kissed her on the back of her hand. Then, he said, "I think you're adorable when you're serious."

Rosalie smiled and spoke what was on her mind, "Actually, I was a little afraid that Xander would hit us when he tore the contract. However, I wasn't that afraid with you around." 'Til protect you," Byron looked into his eyes and promised.

They smiled at each other.

A moment later, thinking of the failed negotiation, Rosalie was troubled.

"I've compromised, but my terms didn't meet the Lancer family's requirement. They might refuse to corporate with the research institute after this..."

If that were the case, it might be a problem for the research institute.

Moreover, Rosalie felt a little guilty upon hearing Xander's question.

Looking at Byron uneasily, she asked, "Did I really go against my promise? It was indeed Xander who came up with this research."

Byron touched Rosalie's hair, trying to comfort her. "There's no agreement between you and him. Xander had planned to use you in his cooperation from the beginning. Otherwise, he wouldn't have suggested taking half of the profit each."

It was a common rule in the industry that the party providing the technology would take more of the profit.

There was no way Xander did not know it.

He wanted to take advantage of Rosalie because she was inexperienced in this field.

Rosalie realized this when Byron explained it to her. "So, he crossed the boundaries of a normal business relationship and fostered a good relationship with the staff in the research institute to get the confidential information of our projects..."

Aware of this, Rosalie was glad she did not fall into that trap.

It was because she had been alerted and kept her guard on Xander. At the same time...

"Fortunately, I asked you in advance, or I might have fallen into Xander's trap."

She smiled gratefully at Byron.

Looking at Rosalie, who had seen Xander's true colors, Byron was pleased. "I can continue helping you in matters like these if you want, and I'll do it free of charge."

As he spoke, his gaze on Rosalie looked ambiguous.

Rosalie quickly realized what he meant and pushed the man away as her face flushed red.

Byron looked at her shy expression and smiled. Then, he diverted the topic to business and stopped teasing Rosalie.

"It won't be bad even if Lancer Corporation refuses to sign the contract. Their medicinal materials are only of better quality than those in the market. They don't have any special qualities. You can get high-grade medicinal materials from other pharmaceutical companies with a high price to make this drug. With that, you can solve the supply problem."

Since Byron was giving her advice about business, Rosalie paid full attention to what he said.

"It'll be easier to deal with the sales channel. A lot of big pharmaceutical companies have online sales channels and regular customers. As long as your drug is good enough, you can publish it on the market soon. If you're still worried, Lawrence Corporation can open a platform for you to sell the drug."

Rosalie was touched.

Lawrence Corporation's technical department was famous globally.

Getting them to set up a platform for their research institute was a waste of their talents.

She smiled gratefully at Byron and said, "I understand. If Larson Corporation refuses to accept the profit division, I'll look for another company to cooperate with."

Byron spoke again after Rosalie agreed to his suggestion.

"It's a pity that the relationship you've built with the Larson family might be ruined if Lancer Corporation and the research institute can't be business partners anymore."

Byron's tone sounded heavy as he continued, "I know you joined the free clinic to learn the Lancer family's ancient medical skills. If the relationship between you and the Lancer family collapses, your previous efforts will be in vain."

Recalling her original intention of approaching the Lancer family, Rosalie felt a little sorry for it. "However, before that, I always thought that the Lancer family was just a simple family with a traditional medicine background..."

Now, she realized that in front of interests, the Lancer family was not as simple as they seemed anymore. Instead, they were more business-minded than she had expected.

Byron tapped Rosalie's back and said, "If you feel pity for the loss, we can compromise on the profits. It's just a matter of earning less money. You can take it as paying the Lancer family for teaching you. If the research institute lacks money, you can ask me for help."

Rosalie was still lamenting about the image of the Lancer family shattering, yet Byron's words almost made her laugh.

"Am I that greedy to you? I'm just interested in the ancient medical skills of the Lancer family. However, during this time, I also found that the medical skills of the Lancer family are not omnipotent. We each have our strengths. Even if I can't learn those skills, I'll become better at what I'm good at, which is not bad."

She looked at Byron seriously. "Moreover, I'm responsible for the interests of all the research institute employees. I can't sacrifice the rewards the employees strive for because of my selfish interests."

After discussing the countermeasures, they decided they could compromise a little in the profit distribution.

Rosalie texted Xander, saying she could give him another 3% of the profit. If Lancer Corporation refused to accept this, their cooperation would have to end.

There was no reply from that end.

It was almost noon, and the matter on Rosalie's side was practically settled. Thus, Byron took her out for lunch.

To make up for the last time, Byron booked a table in the best restaurant in Coast City.

He even ordered a couple's meal.

The two were seated at the table led by a waitress.

"Sir, the drinks in your couple's meal are sold out. Would you like a replacement or a refund?"

After confirming their booking, the waitress asked Byron.

Noticing it was a couple's set, butterflies fluttered in Rosalie's stomach.

Never did she expect Byron would do something childish like this.

Byron, however, calmly presented the menu to her. "Look at what you want to drink and order more food. I don't think the set menu is filling enough."

Rosalie did not dare to look him in the eye. After taking the menu, she placed her order calmly.

The waitress could not help herself, praising, "You two are a lovely couple."

Byron smiled at her.

Rosalie was too shy to speak and kept her head down.

The waitress saw the two people's faces, and excitement surged within her.

'Oh, my God! These two are President Lawrence and his ex-wife, the couple in the scandal online!

'They look better than in the photos.

'President Lawrence is so handsome when he smiles. He's so nice to his ex -wife and even ordered a couple's meal!

'It's all Wendy's fault that a loving couple like them broke apart. Why would they even divorce since they're so loving?' "I've decided what to order."

Rosalie knew nothing about what was on the waitress' mind. When she lifted her head, she saw the waitress' strange expression and decided to respond with a smile.

The waitress took the menu calmly and turned around as another wave of excitement struck her.

'President Lawrence's ex-wife's smile is so beautiful and so gentle! She's so gorgeous!'

Looking at the waitress' somewhat hasty pace, Rosalie found it strange but did not think much. She turned her head back and looked at the man before her.

"We could have just gotten something simple for lunch. Why..."

Byron looked at Rosalie lovingly. "I'm not good at picking venues, but I saw many couples posting this restaurant on their social media. I thought I should bring you here to try their food."

Rosalie's heart skipped a beat upon noticing the emotion in his gaze.

Their children were already in kindergarten, yet she still fell for his handsome face each time she saw it, just like when she fell in love with him back then.

"Six years ago, we missed a lot because of me, and I want to make up for it as much as possible."

Byron explained in his deep voice, "I said I would win your heart again, but I've done very little. I think you refused to accept my proposal perhaps because my pursuit is not sincere enough, and I have to put in more effort." Rosalie's eyelashes fluttered upon hearing his words, and she wanted to retort.

However, it then occurred to her that they both knew the real reason for her reluctance to accept his proposal.

Byron was saying that to find an excuse for his romantic acts...

Thus, she decided not to expose him.

My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 1546-We Will Get Gifts For You

Byron served her food to prove his sincerity. He kept saying romantic phrases and helping her out with the food gentlemanly, making her feel shy and happy at the same time.

After lunch, the waitress served a few desserts. "These desserts are gifts from our restaurant. Best wishes to you."

Rosalie thanked the waitress gently.

Unsure if it was a coincidence, the restaurant served them three desserts.

"I wonder what the kids are doing now. Estie likes tiramisu the most."

The desserts reminded her of the three little ones.

Byron said, "It's supposed to be their lunch break now. If you're worried about them, let's go to the kindergarten and bring them the desserts."

At the thought of seeing the three kids, Rosalie's mood brightened. "I have that in mind too."

They asked the waitress to help them pack the desserts and headed to the kindergarten.

On the way, they called Miss Leigh Ann.

When they arrived at the kindergarten, Miss Leigh Ann also happened to come out of the lounge with the three little ones.

"Daddy! Mommy!"

The children were excited to see Byron and Rosalie. Considering the other kids were still sleeping, they lowered their voices.

Rosalie smiled at the little ones and took them to the car after informing Miss Leigh Ann.

"Mommy, what are you and Daddy doing here?"

Estelle saw the tiramisu packaging, and her eyes lit up in joy.

Rosalie opened the packaging for the little girl and stroked her hair. "We went out for dinner at noon, and the restaurant happened to give us desserts for free. We thought you guys might like them, so we brought them for you. Eat up and go and have your afternoon nap."

Meanwhile, Byron helped the little boys open the two other desserts.

The three little ones gobbled on the desserts.

Nox looked at his mommy and his daddy. Then, he smiled. "Daddy has good taste. These desserts are tasty!"

Byron lifted his eyebrow with interest. 'Til get them for you if you like them." "Thanks, Daddy!" Nox thanked Byron in his cute voice.

The little boy spoke with his daddy so that even Rosalie could not join the conversation.

"Do you have class this afternoon?" Byron asked on purpose.

Understanding Byron's intention, Lucian answered, "Well, we have a group activity this afternoon, and Miss Leigh Ann said everyone should attend it."

Rosalie could not understand why Byron was asking that. Just as she was about to ask him, she heard Byron's deep voice again.

"That's a shame. I was going to take you and Mommy to a movie. Since there's a group activity, it's better if you guys don't skip class."

Rosalie was startled and even wondered if Byron had told her about it.

She had never agreed to go to a movie with Byron.

"This afternoon..." She wanted to say she was going back to work this afternoon.

Estelle held Rosalie's shirt in anticipation. "Mommy, Estie wants new clothes. Please buy some for Estie on the way back from the movie!"

Looking at the little girl's eyes, Rosalie had no choice but to swallow her words.

"Daddy, Lucian and I need new laptops!" i

Nox pondered and took advantage of the situation.

Byron chuckled and said, "Okay. We won't forget to get gifts for you."

The little ones looked expectantly at Rosalie again.

Rosalie could only agree. "Pay attention to your safety in the group activity. I won't give you guys the gifts if you get hurt."

The little ones jumped for joy when Rosalie agreed to go to a movie with Byron.
