My Ex-Wife and Kids Came In Like A Wrecking Ball Chapter 1848-Think They Were The Perfect Match

In the villa, Andrius and Byron were having tea while discussing business.

No further information had been found regarding the cause of the car crash.

Andrius knew his sister worked in Alistair's company. He wanted to get her back home to interrogate her, yet Byron stopped him.

"Last time, it was Alistair who asked Old Master Loewe to help us. Although Rosie wrote the antidote prescription, Old Master Loewe also played a crucial part. So, from this point of view, Alistair isn't someone who would use such a despicable approach. So, we can eliminate him from the list of suspects."

Andrea nodded. It was logical.

The Murray family was famous in the north. They were powerful and had many sub-companies under them. Alistair, who was from this type of family, might play dirty, but he would still abide by the law.

"Have you been taking your medication lately?" Byron asked suddenly.

Andrius nodded. "I've taken them according to the prescription. Dr. Wilson told me to go for another check-up at the end of this month."

"That's good. Mary is very concerned about your illness." Byron hinted, hoping Andrius, who was a simple man, would notice something.

Andrius grinned and said, "Yes. Dr. Wilson is gentle and caring."

It seemed that Mary's charm was working.

Maybe something interesting happened after the donation to the orphanage the last time.

However, Byron felt it was inappropriate for him to ask.

Since Andrius had always been serious in front of him, he could only be serious as well.

Andrius glanced at Byron's expression and felt something was off. He quickly asked, "What's wrong, Byron?"

“Nothing! Keep an eye on Alistair. He lost this time and might be displeased.”

Andrius nodded. He admired Byron deep down.

Alistair was already very discreet when carrying out his plan, but Byron still sensed Alistair's motive. He even counterattacked before Alistair could take advantage of him.

The two of them chatted for a while more. Andrius had an appointment and had to leave.

Byron looked serious as he dialed Luther's number and told him the plan.

The security system around Rosalie had been upgraded, including the research institute, hospital, and company.

They had even added more security personnel in every location.

In addition, every day before her departure, someone would do a safety check on her vehicle.

At lunchtime, Andrius arrived at the restaurant they agreed to meet at.

Beatrice saw Andrius and happily stood up, wanting to shake hands with Andrius.

Many people in the restaurant could see how lively Beatrice was.

Andrius could recognize the woman who crashed into his car that night.

“Hello, Miss! Actually, you don't have to spend any money. There's not much damage done to my car.” Andrius approached yet did not intend to take a seat.

Beatrice smiled. “Mr. Quirke, just take it as having a meal with me. It won't take much of your time, will it?”

“Alright!” Andrius nodded and sat down.

According to the information from Andrea, Beatrice knew what dishes Andrius' favorites were. Thus, she ordered them.

That surprised Andrius.

“Miss Murray, do you like these dishes too? I happen to like them too!”

“The fried chicken fillet is tasty. Are you also from Coast

City? Do you also like this?”

Beatrice felt she was much closer to Andrius after the meal.

She never revealed who she was. Thus, she would naturally not tell Andrius Andrea had given her that information.

All she wanted Andrius to feel was that they were the perfect match.
